Live Barn Owl Nest Box Cam - San Marcos, CA

This is a live feed of a wild female barn owl named Molly. The owl box is located 15 feet off the ground. The male (McGee) has a white chest and face. He usually shows up after dark but has spent an entire day with the female. For more information about the owls and this cam. Click Here Click Here to "Like" us on Facebook.

- Chris in Olympia, WA Remember there is an interview here later today (6:30 PM PDT) with Barbara Allen-Lyall who wrote and whose class performed the "Molly Song".
Jim bowers We all have the song in our head now, they call that an "ear worm"...ugh. Mollymollymolly...eek!!!
Kristi from VA Hello beautiful dave the buzzard man Did you hear Carlos say, as a special treat, Barbara Allen-Lyall is going to be on tonight at 6:30 pdt?
Jere Berkley What did Carlos say about Wes going in the box this morning? I missed it!!
dave the buzzard man Didn't hear that. I just came in as he was talking Patty (Pa) Can't get this tune out of my head!!
Donna in Dallas what a drag, wanted to change my avatar for the avataria but it won't let me browse my computer when editing. 'my computer' is underlined twice in green and clicking it brings up an advertisement.
Bette know that feeling intimately I'm afraid
Donna in Dallas i wonder if there's a way SPO can stop ads that link to the words 'my computer'...
Anne Love how she's standing in fifth position.
Anne Correction - first position!
Bette what do they call the one legged stance in ballet?
Bette well Wesley, what do you think? should I order both of Eric's books? Yeah, I think you're right, I should order them soon. Good advice Wes. thanks dave the buzzard man Eric Blehm said he would autograph his books that you may have or order, just send them to him or request if you order.
Bette not sure, but I think Eric's first book, on the Ranger who disappeared in the wild, is based on a true story that my friend's sister told her years ago -- she's a national park ranger out west where it happened.
dave the buzzard man It is a true story. I bought the book but saving to read when we go camping.
Jan (Bayonne, NJ) I want to read that one, too.
dave the buzzard man The Lawrence of Arabia trailer must have to do with the interview about the book
Bette good quote
Lucky What??.
Jan (Bayonne, NJ) Wow! I've gotta read this book!
Kit in Aiken Thanks Dave, I just came on and didn't realize that I was hung up. Refresh worked.
dave the buzzard man refresh if you have lawrence of arabia
Kit in Aiken Woo... T E Lawrence, this is deep...and spooky. I can't equate Wezame with this. She may be a Drama Queen, but she's OUR Drama Queen and we love her no matter what the heck she's dreaming. I wish I could see her in the PalmTree, don't you?
Bette thump!
Bette Carlos description of Wes returning to the box the second time this morning.
Trystan Williams Yay! Pic back! First time I've heard Carlos in ages dave the buzzard man carbs is on niteowl (v) Missouri Why do I have this weird thing of lawrence of arabia on the screen? Anybody any ideas of whats going on? LOST!
Dr. Web M.D (Adam Curry) smurfst!

I LuV OWLS!! mine is still going!!! im scared jk!!!
Kathryn R I saw something from Lawrence of Arabia, then kaput!
I LuV OWLS!! whats happening
I LuV OWLS!! what is that blavk thing on her? Im concerned Trystan Williams Okay as my photo slideshow is a bit naff, here's a shameless plug of my better video of our young Eagle Owl - Chocolate!
She's almost a year old now but it seems like I made that video yesterday. That's how cool it will be to have pictures and video montages of Molly and family.
Cheryl Owen I absolutely love that video Trystan - she is just gorgeous!!!! I never tire of looking at your photos either Natalie Trystan, that is absolutely wonderful! Especially with that song--thank you so much!
I LuV OWLS!! hahahaha..... I am 2
Dr. Web M.D (Adam Curry) you sure type good for a 2 year old!... wallyrussell Wes is making me sleepy.... I need a nap now, too.....Kathleen

Jan - Just a little info on what "Cute as a Button" means :

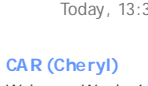

CUTE AS A BUTTON - "cute, charming, attractive, almost always with the connotation of being small. 1868 (from the original 1731 English meaning of 'acute' or clever). Cute as a bug's ear, 1930; cute as a bug in a rug. 1942; cute as a button, 1946. Cute and keen were two of the most covered slang words of the late 1920s and 1930s." From "Listening to America" by Stuart Berg Flexner (Simon and Schuster, New York, 1992.)
Flexner may have an idea about the word "cute," but he provides no guidance on the question of how a button can be cute. The key to the issue is that it is not the button on a shirt that is meant here, but a flower bud seen in the popular name of small flowers, such as bachelor's button

Western WA folks - I'm beginning to think Woodland Park Zoo is a better idea now for the 26th. It is easier for more people ☺, and since Kathryn R in Oregon can't make it ☹️ anyway, we can go with something further north. Also, it appears that their barn owl is on display all the time (swish I'd know where when I was there 2 weeks ago ☺) and the Point Defiance one may only be on display during Wild Wonders Encounter shows. Unfortunately, people would have to pay zoo admission and I don't know where to meet except in front of the entrance. Any ideas on meeting spot where lots of people might gather except at the gate? What time? Once I get the idea set, I will post on all the chats and facebook pages. ☺

It's like having coffee or drinks (depending on what time of day) ☺ with old friends. When Max flew away, I remembered an Andy Griffith episode and I think it bares repeating now. Thanks everybody! Stopped by for a few minutes to see what I had missed today ☺ Got all the way back to my post 6 hrs ago without this thing freezing up, IE closing down etc. Some good discussion, lots of nice pictures and links and the continuing good natured humor that makes this place the "place to be". Some good, diverse opinions on banding birds, the owls in particular. I have no problem with banding and don't think it harms the birds; but I do think it should only be done if there is a good scientific or educational reason for doing so - endangered species, release of wildlife rescue birds, tracking of migration, etc. I guess banding this particular family might be an "educational" reason, but it's a stretch ☺. An interest ing post, too, from ms. Good link about the comb-like, serrated structures on the owls talons that help with preening. Back later this evening.

Western Maine - between Rangeley and Farmington. It's a ways from the Coast; but I grew up about 20 miles north of Portland in the Sebago Lake area. A lot of unique and funny expressions stem from Downeast Maine. One of my favorite - "ya" can't get "tha-yah" from "he-ah" - particularly useful when a tourist asks directions and expects - "X" number of miles East and "Y" number of miles North, etc.

Most of these type photo promotions have a pre-set but undisclosed limit on the number of freebies. They almost always do, even more so since the widespread use of online advertising. Once the deal was posted to a frantic group of mouse pad seekers, the limit was likely met in short order. How do I know? I used to manage all photo lab operations and promotions for a regional drugstore chain, was even an unwilling member of the Rite-Aid family (through acquisition) for a very brief period of time. Being a "hometown" retailer, we used the "unspoken limits" which the national chains imposed to our advantage. We would honor our competitors coupons (and freebie offers) almost whenever asked.

We were all so very thankful and happy to finally be a family. Max, always being the first one to eat, as if he thought it was all just for him. Then one day, I noticed Max keeping an eye on his little brother Wesley, being sure he had enough food to eat. Pattison and Austin were very patient, as were all of them in taking their shares of food.

Pattison and Austin were very patient, as were all of them in taking their shares of food. It is as if they all began to take care of each other. After days went by, I noticed that Max seemed to overlook all of them and so it was time. Time to begin the process of letting our babies grow up. It was at this time, they had the appearance of baby snowballs, I knew they would be warm with their down feathers. It is a miracle how life...and nature takes such great care of us all in this universe.

Two days later, Pattison came along, pecking himself out of his shell, with Max watching close by. "What is he doing mom? I thought I was an only child", said Max. "Does this mean I have to share everything now?", Max whined. McGe and I both laughed as days later, along came two others, Austin and then our little Wesley.

We began raising our family of four tiny owlets, the first one born, we call Max, he broke out of his shell on March 21 like the world was on fire! We had a feeling he would make his mark on the world. McGe and I watched in amazement as he began to take on the world, very independent this one!

For those of you interested in the song "Smile" - I did a little lyric re-write back in May...here's a re-post:

For those who remember the song from the Charlie Chaplin movie - this can be sung to the tune of "Smile"

Fly, though our hearts are aching,
 Fly, even though we're breaking,
 When you see stars in the sky you'll get by

If you fly, though we feel some sorrow,
 Fly, and maybe tomorrow
 We'll see the sun coming though
 'cause of you.

You light up our lives with gladness,
 This is no time for sadness
 Although a tear may be ever so near

That's the time you must keep on flying Fly! While we may start crying please don't look back just continue to thrive and fly!

Once upon a time, in a beautiful garden located in San Marcos, CA, we spotted this most magnificent location to raise our young. From miles up above into they sky as we were sailing with the wind beneath our wings, McGee had me follow him towards the land below...an extraordinary home for us, built as though it was made just for us. A home in which to raise our young. And so it began, as I laid one egg, (oh dear, that one broke), two, three, four, five, and six, the one that never hatched, for whatever reason. We began raising our family of four tiny owlets...the first one born, we call Max.....(shall I go on?)

Each evening bird lover Tom Rowe stood in his backyard in Devon, England, hooting like an owl -- and one night, an owl called back to him

For a year, the man and his feathered friend hooted back and forth. Rowe even kept a log of the "conversation." Just as Rowe thought he was on the verge of a breakthrough in inter-species communication, his wife had a chat with next door neighbor, Nancy Hollis.

"My husband spends his nights ... calling out to owls," said Mrs. Rowe.

"That's odd," Mrs. Hollis replied. "So does my John."

Then it dawned on them

Still not found out about Larry! - but another phrase used here is 'Happy as a Sandboy' again didn't know the meaning of this but under the 'clam' answer was this:

As happy as a sandboy is an expression which implies blissful contentment. I believe that the saying is truly Bristolian in origin. On Bathurst basin, in the City centre is the long established Ostrich Inn. The Inn is immediately adjacent to the Redcliff caves which, in their day, were a prime source of sand. Past landlords of the Inn used to send little boys ie Sandboys into the caves to collect sand to spread on the floor of the Inn to soak up the beer and ale droppings (much like butchers used to put sawdust on the floor of their shops). The Sandboys were paid for their efforts in beer. They were indeed happy.

Well I've solved your clam saying - just got to work on who Larry is now!! (Thank goodness for Google!)

The saying is very definitely American, hardly known elsewhere. The fact is, we've lost its second half, which makes everything clear. The full expression is happy as a clam at high tide or happy as a clam at low tide, when you stand a chance of finding them and extracting them. At high water, clams are comfortably covered in water and so able to feed, comparatively at ease and free of the risk that some hunter will rip them untimely from their sandy berths. I guess that's a good enough definition of happy.

"Happy as a Clam" is a favorite expression by those of us in the Northeast - especially those along the Maine, NH and Massachusetts coast. Natalie can probably tell you all about Ipswich clams in MA and "damming" is a trade practiced by many along the coast of Maine - hard, back-breaking work because it is all done by hand with a clam hoe or rake and can only be done at low tide as Cheryl said. - Just my 2 cents worth 😊

If we meet at Woodland Park, I could certainly join up for awhile. My "conflict" is the imminent fledging of some young MerIn falcons at that time of this month. I am a principal in the Merlin monitoring at this site and fledging time is pretty much the biggest event of the season. Won't know when exactly they will fledge, so my availability to meet will be a last-minute decision. Gee, I just thought, that I could offer a visit to the site (it is pretty near Woodland Park). They aren't Barn Owls, but they are raptors and pretty charismatic as well. You could watch the young and adults do their thing in a "Neighborhood Box"! I will post a few photos if there is any interest.

An owl landed on the roof of the box and Wes jumped back inside the doorway, stamping and hissing, then came out to the perch again and chased the newcomer off. Good afternoon! Nice to see Wes still in the box--her time will come!
I just got buzzed by a little RT hummer--thought I was under attack by a huge bumblebee at first! (I think he likes my bright red Red Sox shirt.)

He probably DOES like your bright red shirt! I can't count the times that I've freaked out because I thought a hummingbird was a hornet buzzing me! One time I was hiking in Point Reyes National Wilderness near San Francisco. The path went straight through a flat scrub area, in the center of which was a patch of small trees. As I approached the patch, I heard the sound of what sounded like a huge nest of bees or hornets - it was VERY loud and scared the bejebers out of me. But as I closed in on it, I saw that it was a large number of hummingbirds, flying among the trees. When I walked through the patch, there were hummers flying all around my head! What an experience!!

Banding question: What do you all think?
Personally, I'm not opposed to banding and don't think it hurts the birds or hinders their movement. I wish our little family here had been banded because I would like to know what happens to them. Opinions?

I don't think banding will tell us what happens to them. Most wild birds die and decompose without anyone picking through the body or even seeing it. So I'd say it wouldn't matter anyhow. And someone mentioned that only Federal Wildlife officials would band. This is a common barn owl, and there isn't any compelling scientific reason to band.

I have no objections to banding. Owlo. I think we've learned a lot from it. BTW, my husband has a friend who's a licensed bander--he lost one of his eyes to a Great Horned owl a few years ago...but he's still banding.

Not against it at all, if handled properly, but I respect Carlos' decision not to. Besides, the actual info obtained from banding wild raptors is very spotty, at best, and mostly only comes in the form of bad news. One must have the band in hand to know anything at all - so to speak.

Banding is putting a metal identification ring on the leg am I right? Over in the UK we call that ringing and it's been really useful for learning about wild and captive birds. At the World Owl Centre we ring all birds we breed, as well as most wild birds that come through our wildlife hospital before releasing back to the wild. I don't recall seeing any evidence that the small metal ring/band hinders their movement at all. We ring Pygmy Owls the size of a finch! They all get about just fine

I always think that it somehow makes the banded, or colored, animals look like criminals... like they're on a home-monitor while out on parole... I also have this fantasy that the other animals make fun of them for it.
But, you know me...

Several weeks ago there was a lengthy discussion about banding and I thought it was on this chat page. Apparently there are pros and cons, some say the bands increase the chance of the bird breaking his leg. I have noticed on the eagle cam, the eagles have tags attached in the chest area.

The tags on the eagles are so they can be ID-ed from a distance, using the cameras and optics. They sometimes have both, tags and leg-bands.

Thanks for the comments. I understand that someone would have to find and turn in the band for it to do any good - and that's not likely to happen in most cases. But I thought it was an interesting question.
(hey! I'm getting better! This time I replied to my original post without deleting it instead! Woo hoo!)
Cheryl, I'm still laughing about your comment that the other birds would make fun of them for having a band. Couldn't it be just as true that they would be jealous of the bing?

Many studies are coming out that are weighing in on the idea that individual animals DO have personalities. The word 'personality' being defined as a group of separate individual traits, vs. traits commonly shared in the species. I firmly believe animals DO have personalities, and watching these owls develop them has strengthened my belief.

Proof of this will have to come through further research, but it is very heartening to know that the research is being done!!

No banding = no research = no insight & info about their lives = no ability to help them if they are endangered.

Not that I think all owls should be banded, but there is this thought to consider.

BTW: all indications show that the birds get used to the bands quickly and then forget about them. They're practically weightless.

Steve,
Your remarks are surely echoed by many many folks here and on some of the other sites that follow Molly and her babies. I know that I also have a new overwhelming respect for these creatures. If you have not yet read "Wesley the Owl" by Stacy O'Brien, it is well worth the $15 cost (at Borders) and darlies/teaches lots of owl information.
And yes, wouldn't it be wonderful for some of this family to return next year? Perhaps Carlos and Donna will do this again....

Before I head out to get things done around here today I did a quick check on the Dutch owls. I only see 4 of the 5 but moms there and they all seem happy and are resting. Their faces seem a lot different than our babies did at that age, a lot more pointed but still cute. The momma owl isn't as pretty as our Molly but she is taking good care of her babies and that is the important thing.
If you want to see them too here is the site:

Afternoon Everyone!! I thought Wesley might be back in the box today. She was guarding it quite strongly earlier every time another owl turned up! Any way I'm just popping in for a second as I've just got home from work. I've been pruning and sorting out curry plants today (Helichrysum italicum) - I've stopped smelling it myself but my husband won't come near me until I have a shower!! See you all later morning at, I've been lurking a bit this morning... I was literally sick as I waited for this site to come up... the anticipation of whether I'd see Wesley or an empty box was almost too much! I have enjoyed talking and listening to each of you. I'm quite active on facebook so I'll look for you all there when this is over... I'm Kathy barefoot, so you'll recognize me... or Afs KAT, <chuck> James, could you list the websites on the facebook page? For some reason I can't find my favorite places (it could be they're on the laptop but I can't find them at all on the desktop).

12 yrs ago, I was fortunate to participate in a conservative political chat room where the atmosphere was very similar to this... my husband was working out of state and rode out a hurricane in VA with 2 of the families and spent Thanksgiving with them and I have friends scattered across the country to this day from it... there's no reason for us to lose touch with each other... especially with Facebook.
I've got to go cut the grass while hubby weed whacks with his new tool so I'm wishing each of you a wonderful day today!

 JAMES, I think what you've said about keeping the sanctity of the FB page is important. I'm not on FB, but I have observed a lack of Politics and Religion HERE and that has kept many hearts open to connect on instead of building walls. We have a special appreciation for everybody here and if we could spread this outward rather than breathe in the fumes from "out there" we would continue to shift the world. We have been polite and we share opinions gently.

Tell Rodney..... We CAN all get along.

 I think it's more of a "just wherever feels comfortable" thing. There really hasn't been much of a pecking order with this group. They all advanced according to their age but they never really took on dominant/submissive roles. At least not that I've interpreted. I've seen them all stand close to the door and hide their faces in the back corner at various times.

 I was thinking last night: what keeps us all coming back here for more? The owls are beautiful, for sure, but I think the connecting fiber for all of us is curiosity. What are they doing; why did she sleep lying down; how could she eat that whole; where are they going; what will they do with the computer? Curiosity is what separates the bright, successful people in the world from those who just settle. If you are a parent of a youngster, do everything you can to keep them curious about anything... something. As I end another school year, say goodbye to the owls, and celebrate my mom's life, I hope all of you will stay curious and that we will find another place to learn more about the world's many fascinations!

 Another thought to consider. We are created relational beings with a strong need to be "connected". Some people connect more truly than others but we all need to connect in some way to experience those good emotions like love, appreciation, wonder, thankfulness, etc. It has truly been a lot of fun connecting with these wonderful little critters.

I was laying in bed last night - trying to negate the want to come down to computer at 2am... and realized we have viewed about 1/6th of these owls lives. ... so if humans tentatively live until age 80 or just a bit over... we have witnessed the growth of these owlettes until about our age 20 human life!!!!

Good morning, I did a quick check after getting up this morning to see what the day may hold. It was good to see our little Diva Wesley is honoring us with at least one for day of her beauty. She hatched 3 days after Austin so there might even be one more day after today. Her little internal clock will tell her and us when she is ready to face the world head on.
So many emotions were felt last night as the thought of the empty owl box. It is hard to imagine our days ahead without checking in over and over to see what these little owls are up to. We will survive though with great memories and it may be some e-books, mugs t-shirts etc. to help keep the memory alive.

Wesley is SOooo on the verge of not coming back ... yesterday was her first day "alone" ... Austin fledged out to the pairs. Her wistful cry last evening just outside the box had most of our hearts bleeding ... as we watched our big girl stretch her wings ... chat room thought that was most likely the last of an occupied box. Last night she was again - alone. ... but yet, here she is again ... "in the box"

Ok I will share with you what I told the night crew. I think it would be great if when this is over we all send Carlos and Donna snail mail to thank them. Some of us have signed the e-card and some have already went them notes and other things. When they get back from their long awaited vacation their mail box will be stuffed! What do ya think? I am going to do it anyway, but I was just thinkin'.

Can someone verify that?

Yes, that is what I have. It took me a while to find it among my well organized papers! And I think we should do it fairly soon after he turns the cam off because it is a PO box that he set up for this.

Hi Connie--Yes, I agree. Had already decided to do that too. The photos from the last two nights are priceless. I so hope they find a way to publish a book of them but boy! it would be sooo difficult to chose which ones to use. My husband is so tired of hearing me say each morning "Just look at these!!"

When Wesley was on the platform earlier this morning during her little pounce practice, I was cracking up! I think I will miss these owlets little antics most of all. What a ride this has been and I thought for a little while this morning that it was over, but I guess Miss Diva Wesley hasn't felt the pull strong enough from her instincts to leave yet. More the better for us, but I know it will come when the activity of all the owlets will be out of our view and we'll just have to imagine and wish them the best. They got a great head start from their parents.

I woke up early and enjoyed her pouncing on the platform, and realized she's learning to hunt just fine. She's probably more and more excited realizing just what her talons can do, and hold. Now it's just plenty more practice. did Carlos put a strobe for the platform for them? 😊 😊 bve at the details, stats, etc., but the thought of examining the owlets with a fine-toothed comb came to mind (in a loving manner, of course). did you know they have a built-in comb? I bet everyone knows this by now, but here, anyway:

"The Tytonidae family is also unique among owls for having what is known as a "pectinate claw". This is a comb-like, serrated structure that runs along the inner talon edge of the third digit. It is generally thought to aid in preening and is also found on herons, egrets, bitterns and nightjars."
p.s. oh, and their tracks really are XX - that, with their heart-shaped face, no wonder they've generated so much bve. 😊 have a nice day, all....

Try Africa or the Western PA cam. Not the bird identification ones but ones done outside in a meadow or forest so you get everything). I have a couple and they are nice to listen to in the winter.

And here are the stats, such as they are. No owl or owlet names, and no treat names--just times.

June 8/9 Hunting Stats: Total treats observed: 9. Deliveries at 8:59p, 9:44p, 9:49p, 10:11p, 11:55p, 12:54a, 3:14a, 3:43a.

Branching Stats: Wesley out at 8:34p. Flew to The Palms at 5:05a but decided not to get a mani-pedi today and returned to the owlbox at 5:14a. Max, Patti and Austi are enjoying all the amenities of The Palms.

Wes is not confused. Wes carried most of that food inside. A few times she took it in and then came right back out, to wait for more.

She knows exactly what she's doing
