Poor baby probably doesn't know what to think! She's such a timid little thing and just recently left the box. She's a week behind everyone physical development wise, but she's also demonstrated that she is also a few more days beyond that, because it took her longer to leave the box and longer to stay away from the box. And she still comes back looking for her Mom and Dad to bring her food.

I hope Molly and McGee keep caring for their existing brood while she is getting ready to lay more eggs.

1. Wesley Anne finally joined everyone at the Palms Spa and Howtel
2. M&M came back and bonded "played house"?
3. Have the Royals left yet?
4. I don't think the owl box is going to be available for rent hehehe

Good morning from the east coast! I also stayed up way too late last night after the events of the evening. And up early this morning. So I see the general consensus is it's Molly: what a turn of events! 😊

Good Morning from Greenfield, Mass. I have finally started going to bed with computer on the floor beside me so when I wake, I can check in. I was here late last night early this morning to witness the change of e>ents. "Gee!! Isn't this wonderful!" I guess the world will continue turning without us! Morning blessings to all & if this is turned off tonight as expected, I'll see you all over on Facebook!

I had so much trouble with my computer... I bought a new one. Now I have 2 next to my bed... a perk for being single. Haha. Last night I said that if we got to do this again... I needed one of those beds that you can move your legs up and down and get a hospital table to roll in front of me... Now I need to go to the Chiropractor when this is over... Tough on the back to watch and try and stay warm and be comfortable. kinks!

Oh my gosh all Good morning I couldn't shut off the computer last night!! It's 6:34 am Missouri time and i didn't shut down till 3 am. Again were 2 hours ahead of molly time. The mating was a miracle and a very loud one at that. They had to run off 1 of the babies and feathers got a little ruffled. Carlos went for tea last we heard and we wondered if he made a stronger drink. Oh my

Don't know about owls.... (I'm no expert)... but my bluebirds certainly do this - they are currently feeding their last 4 fledglings.... while Mollis sitting on 5 more eggs - due to hatch late this week .... they work so hard!! If true - I think this is a testimony to how well this clutch has done - they felt safe (not threatened) and found plenty of "goodies" to feed their babies... Can't wait to hear what Carlos has to say about these developments.

advertised the real estate! 😊

copied from an earlier posting by Tony ..... I read it was very natural for the female and male to mate again...and it said that the male would still feed and teach the owls to hunt, while the female gets ready for the next babies

I want/need to know where the babies are!! Has Max moved on to another "hunting" ground?? I know there were three together last night. I just thought it was the babies. At one time Carlos went outside and came on to tel us that he thought the one one top of the box was Austin. BUT from what everone's saying this morning, must have been McGee?? Oh my....

.....and the saga continues.....

WOW this is not how I thought it would end. Molly & McGee starting another family. Our thoughts and prayers with you to be as successful as the first. PS: Hope Carlos posts updates to the Molly Box, now curious if she will have fewer eggs this time, food supply at this time of year more plentiful or less than the springtime family? Oh it just keeps going on. So thankful we had the window into the wonders of all this modern age of electronics so many got to share from afar, no owls stressed by all this peering.

From what I'm reading on the Barn Owl Trust it says the male is present at the nest for the two weeks leading up to the egg bying and until the clutch is complete. Incubation is 31-32 days.

So, that would mean they would start hatching around the end of July.

Was just doing some reading. It's not unusual for a second clutch to begin before the first are still gaining independence. The male takes over parental duties for the owlets while the female begins the second brood. Eggs are generally laid one month after mating, but we have no idea what's been going on over in the palm tree so it's anyone's guess when a next clutch might be laid.

Someone posted a site earlier that said they usually actually mate later-Winter-but start the process of the female gaining weight in the spring. So she can be in good shape for egg laying I guess. If that is what is happening here then Molly will stay around while Mcgee feeds her. I didn't read everything though and could have misunderstood. It's something to look into though.

 Of course, the one drawback of being retired is that you eventually change your whole cycle around. My husband plays computer games with people all over the world, and he goes to bed between 4am & 5am. He claims nothing good ever happens in the morning. He thinks this is great because he's on the other side of the room, with his 2 machines and I sitting here chatting with people from all over the world. Now we have something in common again. 😊

Just read on the Barn Owl Trust site about egg laying etc. Molly would have to get back into breeding condition again which would involve her putting weight on - If its going to happen I guess she will start staying in the box and McGee will bring food to her again, which I don't think would happen until all the current owlets are hunting independently - however their courtship rituals look like they're underway! - here's the link anyway!

I'm about 60/40 thinking it's M&M. One of them did a classic clumsy McGee box entry. But when there was the 3rd owl outside the box, it looked like an adult to me and not a baby. Plus it didn't hiss like an owl, so I wondered if it was another adult attracted by the mating calls.

I'm not so sure now - it looks like maybe it was the start of this strange event instead

I do, Chris. I really do. And unfortunately, it all passes just a little too quick. Just like these fuzzy little guys. I really hope to get a few peeks in throughout the day, but it's gonna be tricky. *sigh* Timing is everything.

I read online that at 12 weeks is about the time the parents stop feeding the young, really tapering off ...and by 14 weeks, the young ones have left the parents home range. Well...Wesley is not that age yet, but didn't I read on here, that Max and Patty certainly could be? I'm looking at a calendar and counting the weeks from the first hatch....

Ok, I have to admit I have MOD. I have been in totaldenial. I've now attached myself to 3 different sites and I still have a large hole in my heart for our famous owl family. What, oh what will we do after tomorrow? Is there a pill we can take for this ache in our hearts? BUT....the ache is not as big as our appreciation for Carlos and Donna for sharing THEIR lives with us. Hats off to them and all who posted pictures etc. I raise my glass to ya'owl.
