            I think that mocking bird just has a blast living life! According to Carlos yesterday, the mocking bird was pecking furiously on the head of a neighborhood hawk perched on the kestrel box trying to eat some beetle grubs which it favors.

            I was reading in the basement and heard that mocking bird - even though I knew it wasn't our owls... it sounded so real - I had to scroll up and see!!! How funny that he's learned to sound like them ©

                   Not surprising, Cindy - that's what Mockingbirds mimic - the birds and sounds around them.

Chicakee or anyone who knows. There was a point when Molly or McGee was on the perch 1 was on the roof and 1 on the jungle gym and then the 1 on the roof and jungle gymhad a somewhat like "spat" and flew off. Carlos then said owls had collided....do we know who those original 3 were?

                          OK, OK, so I was kidding when I said Carlos should put a solar fan into the owl box. I know there are owl boxes all over California and Israel (and other places that get really hot).
                          However, the more I thought about putting a $23.78 fan in the roof, the better I liked the idea.
                          See the fan at the image.

                                   I think just a few vent holes up threre around the top would be adequate. it's CA, and not the Mojave, but I share your concern. 😃

         That's my one concern about a second dutch, Mary Carroll. I'm not suggesting The Apocalypse 🕡 🕡 🕡 , but I do have a concern about hyperthermia. My parrots are equatorial, so you'd think if any eggs and babies could survive heat, theirs could, but that's not true. And if it's true for equatorial birds, it'd have to be true for temperate ones. It's just biophysics, not alarmism.

         Hi Mollie! Well, we're on a main road, actually, but there are woods behind the house. We get lots of birds, but the turkeys don't come in the yard too often, and I've never seen them with babies here before, so it was a treat. Wild turkeys are abundant in MA now, thank goodness.

         been shaking if I came home and suddenly saw themin my yard, and you wouldn't have been able to tell what bird it was! Maybe they'll be making

You got deprivation right the second try! Laura, it's only a big word for you because you haven't run into it before. There's a first time for every word we ever use, and if you don't hear anybody using it, or come across it in a book, how are you going to know what it means? It's really no big deal - I just read a lot and I would have to be brain-dead if I didn't pick up at least SOME new words along the way! It happens without you even noticing it. That's one of the things I love about reading - after a while, it just sinks in and then helps you to understand even more. I am a Book Pusher! they have all sorts of birds, including a red tailed hawk named isis who is blind in one eye and another one named henriet ta who has neurological problems. the funniest one was the crow who kept talking to us. oh....and the little shore bird who was hand raised and won't eat unless someone feeds him!

        Lucky - Ive been to the Ding Darling Wildlife refuge. It's been quite a few years now, but I remember falling in love with it's beauty. I stayed on Captiva for 6 days in off-season, and remember being in my own special world on the empty beaches, sitting by the water and letting the exquisite shells just wash into my lap. I posted here weeks ago about that trip; a great blue heron came to be my companion for about an hour every day as I sat there.

Just finished making the card I amsending to Carlos' and Donna. Added a new little poem to the inside and a photo of Molly on the front.
This will be the third time I have sent a card. The first was a donation to all the equipment he had to buy. The second was one with a poem
I had written. Had response each time from Donna.
Don't expect to hear back this time because they are going to be swamped with cards and letters if everyone follows through with sending notes of thanks.
I think it is great that so many want to say thanks from this site as they have not been able to see all the positive things that are said here about them.

Hot and Humid in SC, but the sun is out and you would need a high number sunscreen. Of course, I'm happily inside at 73 degrees, and won't have to go out until later to take the dog to swim. Wish he'd swim in the waves, but he doesn't like waves; it's about 1/2 mile walk down to the channel where he swims. We were asking about that earlier - it's surprisingly difficult information to find on the internet! Someone said it can happen in as little as 3 days! We all expected to hear from Carlos this morning because we are used to his morning chats but also because of the unexpected events last night. But Carlos has been silent. I'm sure he's busy getting ready for vacation but I suspect that's something Donna can do pretty well on her own. I can't help but wonder if Carlos is having a little trouble with the idea of saying goodbye to all of this... and all of us. He knows we are here at SPO, but he's gotten to be friends with the people on the other chat just like we've gotten to be friends here. Today it all becomes real. Goodbye. No more owl watching. No more owlet antics. No more chatting about every little activity. Today it must feel pretty final. If I were him I would be walking around in tears.
He knows we want to hear from him - I bet he's having trouble doing that.

        Carlos usually comes on by now but he is probably waiting until the last show and tell tonight to take questions. I don't blame him at all for not coming on this morning and having to repeat everything again later on.
        I like to think that he is gathering all the trinkets and owl-themed things he has gotten so he'll be ready for the show and tell tonight. And perhaps checking any pictures he took last night to determine if the two owls were Molly and McGee (the blog hasn't been updated either).

       Molly and McGee did not stay in the box, when they started mating the first time. It's natural for them to still roost away from the box, even while mating.
        Only when the female is ready to start nesting and laying eggs will she begin staying in the box full time again.

I'm no expert at all but with the things ive read I would imagine Molly left as they are still teaching the owlets to hunt - particularly Wesley as she only properly fledged a couple of days ago. Before Molly can start laying any more eggs she has to get up to 'breeding' weight so I would imagine that over the next week or so, once the other owlets are hunting for themselves, she will start staying in the box more and McGee will bring her food. I'm fairly convinced that she is going to have another brood - although it came as a complete surprise to find them both in there overnight so soon!!! The best person to ask for 'proper information' is Trystan - I'll try and catch him if he turns up later!!

HI Kathryn R,
        Just getting back for a minute....Did anyone mention any owl knowledge or have any ideas on why Molly left? I was fully expecting to see her in the box this morning Unid Carlos mentioned any sighting of the owlets in the palm this morning?

       iwould think carlos and donna got so attached they would put up cameras again if the owls came back with another round of eggs to mother. how long are they going away for...donna and carlos?.... maybe hopefully they will start again if there are new eggs in there when they return!

        It's possible round 2 already started! Did you read the news? Molly and McGee returned to the nest box last night and appeared to be mating. We could have new eggs soon. Hoping Carlos will at least take a few nght pictures once he returns from vacation to show us who's flying around.

        hopefully carlos will let us watch again!

I have been faithfully hooked (almost wrote HORKED!) on this site since the beginning. (My daughter from NH sent it to me). I have told and retold about this wonderful adventure to many friends, but NEVER came across anyone who has ever seen it or heard about it. In fact, they all smile very condescendingly at me and just nod their heads, like sympathetically!
Is ANYONE out there from Syracuse, or even nearby???? PLEASE STAND UP AND BE COUNTED WITH ME (or not?) I thank you from the bottom of my northeastern heart..... 🙂

Okay, I just woke from a brief nap and scrolled down to see the responses to my 10:47 post. You guys CRACK ME UP! I haven't looked at the Cafe Press site

Blem's email in my inbox as a reminder to order my hardcover book. Free time these days are limited, as you can imagine. Baby Lydia is doing well ... I'll post

I have been watching since March 27, the day before Wesley hatched. I did not know bout the site until then. I treasure the memories of the love and care given the owlets by Molly and McGee and will enjoy my e-Comics, e-Book, and hard cover book I have purchased. I have also bookmarked many of the sites listed here, so I can return to them when I get lonely for the Owl family. I plan to continue looking at other SPO sites, as I have found them fascinating also.
Just wanted to say "Thanks for the Memories" before the Owl Box camera shuts down tonight.

        You simply can not compare himan-type emotions with owl emotions. It's like comparing apples to oranges. The way we experience our emotions is applicable only to humans, not owls. In homo sapiens, a lot of complex baggage has been added on to the basic, primal emotions we share with other species. That 'baggage' has no place in an owl's life; it supplies nothing that an owl needs to survive.

Oh yeah, and READ ALL the helpful info posted below about not posting so many dang-blasted Stars!

Stop what you're doing and watch a cool video or 2 until I can finish.

                        There are actually two places where you can "vote" by clicking on the stars: At the top of the page there are 5 reddish stars, below those stars is the latest vote count-- and just below your name there are 5 stars that turn gold when you click on them. Either one, but not both, will result in one vote. And, as a reminder:
                        you do not have to comment to vote nor do you have to post to let us know that you have voted. I often vote wihout commenting as I want to follow the

                       PLEASE READ!! ABOUT STARS
                        If you are merely posting to add stars, or reposting because you forgot them, please don't. All you have to do is dick on the stars at the top of the page to add your rating. You do not need to add a comment. Dozens of comments with nothing but stars only makes the chat move too fast and makes it more difficult to find or follow conversations. PLUS, this site has over 19000 stars; the next closest one has less than 600 stars. Your presence and involvement here has already counted for so much and we will certainly have 300+ people sign on by tonight.

I don't know about anybody else but Im quite happy boking at the box, even if it is empty. I can just pretend theyre all in there cuddling up and swaying in the breeze. I might just have to put a photo of the box on my computer screen and watch that.

        McGee came back about mignight and enticed Molly's back into the box for a little bonding. Probably more eggs will follow shortly. Carlos and Donna will run away when they find out.
          Today, 10:16:19 - Flag - Like - Reply quick summary is that it would appear that Molly and McGee are back - we know it is possible that they could have a second brood this year - and from the information that I ve read it would appear that it is even possible while some of the previous owlets are still in the nest - however they have waited until the last one fledged - just!!!! Even if they have a second brood they do continue to teach the other owlets to hunt for themselves. They aren't in the box at the moment but did spend a lot of time in there last night - hopefully Carlos will give us a bit more information later.

We are at 19,610 votes. The goal is 20,000 by COB (close of business). One sign-in with stars (or one refresh with stars) = 1 \text{ vote}.

          Just posted my 5 stars!!! © Thanks for the reminder!!

         Dianne, I was wondering who set that goal? The next closest site has less than 600 votes so we've already marked this as an outrageously successful
          We've been asking people NOT to post just to post stars since it counts the same if you merely click on the stars in the upper left corner of the page.
          Multiple 'star' posts last night really jammed up the site and actually put us off line for a few minutes. You can vote without posting a comment.
          Comments with content are good! It's just the 'posting just for stars' ones that are unnecessary.

         Owlo - I thing the "stars" things started a couple of days agao and it has literally SNOWBALLED and caused way too many unnecessary posts just for that reason. Your post above to just check on the stars each time one signs on or refreshes is good.

          Lagree - just been reading the BarnOwl Trust info http://www.barnowltrust.org.uk/content_images/pdf/About_the_Barn_Owl_331262866052.pdf
          It says on there that whilst Barn Owls are not territorial they will defend the area immediately adjacent to their nesting area and also Adult Barn Owls are 'highly sedentary - once established, they do not normally leave their home range' which is why I think it was Molly and McGeel

 To check out last night's videos go to www.u.s.tream.tv/theowlbox Just remove the spaces. Under the live video are recorded ones. Unfortunately, the automated spam detector (spambot) will delete posts with that word written out or that link.
 Then underneath the live videos are a number of recorded videos. Look for Molly & McGeee return or something like that.
