Each Dutch owl has a mouse. Runtley has one that I'm afraid is just a shade too large for him. But he's an energetic little guy. He just may get it down!

On the internet and in life it really works best to ignore people who bother you. When you react it entertains them and makes them continue. Ignore. Ignore. Ignore.

Well, back from the office and caught up with the chat. I was just about to agree with Bill that you guys sure like to talk a lot but James beat me to it. I am sad to see I missed Carlos chatting on the other site today. I think I may be an owl box groupie! Need to run and get my owl to bed. Doubt I'll get back here tonight. My husband already thinks I am nuts and I am finally getting back to the gym after months of missing my daily workouts and swims. I have a lot of explaining to do next trip to my health care provider. I imagine the conversation to go something along the lines of "why have I not been working out and why I am gaining weight I don't need?" ... "well, you see there was an owl box in California and I started watching in March at first it was just every few days but then they hatched and before I knew it I was no longer working out, eating right, and I was stuck to my chair and glued to my computer over night."

Night all enjoy.

We need a handy name recognition feature. Anytime someone includes your name in a post, you get an audible alarm on your end. Would make it easy to keep up with one another. That said, I agree with what Bill said earlier, "You folks like to talk!" I better get a move on making a PDF...

 You're right, bunny. And that's just what happened with my sister. When she passed away I finished up some of her UFO's for her grown children and I argued probably 200 yards of her fabric - enough to fill two 2 double-door, four-shelf cabinets. And I already had four 4-drawer bureaus full and a large toe full of my own UFO's. I've given away some and sold some at a yard sale. But, geez, how much fabric does one person need??

 Lynda! I just scrolled down and saw your post about the wall hanging! I remember yours (especially bc I downloaded them - they are SO PRETTY!). I forget that technique! Thanks for reminding me! See... I knew I needed to bring that back up! That's what I liked about your WH'S. Hmm... I remember how putting the trees into the borders looked so pretty - hey, I could put a palm tree!! I like that! Thanks!

 You're very welcome!! I like her technique of several overlapping pieces of fabric for the body of an animal or bird (you just have to make each piece a little bigger where it will be overlapped). It gives it a lot of depth. And I live using the light-weight fusible web to hold all those tiny pieces in place - even though I still stitch around the edge of each piece.

 WOW! Three more very good ideas! I think applique will be the way for me to go. I hadn't thought about the sizes, yikes! I have tons of fusible web, so I'm good there. I need to be in touch with you for help. I've never done something that had depth to it, so I'll be looking for you for ideas. Okay?

 Fine. I'd love to help if I can. I don't applique well enough to use just that method. Some of the pieces I used on my hummingbird project were so very tiny, so the fusible web helped.

 Oh, I drew my picture from Carlos' pic of my fav. of the owls. Then, I put the drawing thru my projector at school and drew it on a piece of paper. Now I have my template to make my pattern. So, it's kinda like your idea, except you probably draw MUCH better than I. I trace really good!

 I absolutely CANNOT draw - even a straight line - but I can trace real good. I'm hoping to use several different fabrics in the body so to give a sense of feathers, the spotted chest, etc. - so I will need to trace out several different pieces. The face is going to take some thought.

 Chocolate has a chemical compound in it that makes a person feel good. Eating chocolate to feel better is a reasonable thing to do.

 Good evening MOD friends! I love still being able to come here after work to see all of you!

Here are a couple more wild turkey photos—they're still coming to the yard—and one is a sort of close-up of the hen's feathers. To me, wild turkeys look sort of dull from a distance, but you can see here that their coloring is really beautiful. The other photos are a young downy woodpecker, and a juvenile red-bellied woodpecker. (For Jan!)

 So stunning! And the feather patterns are so interesting. I wonder what purpose the overlapping semi-circles serve? Maybe when they're deployed, they attract the opposite sex or something.

 Good question. Of course, what I really wish I had is a photo of one of the males displaying. But you can see that the females have "beards," too! 😊

Jan (Bayonne, NJ)
 Elliott - Those feathers are in a "fish-scale" arrangement; a lot of birds have that. You can see it close up on hummingbirds. I don't know why they grow like that, but I'll hazard a guess: they seem to appear on parts of birds that have a lot of flexibility. Perhaps they keep the skin underneath from getting wet, even when stretched over the curved flexible area. I didn't word that well; I hope you get my drift...

 Thank you, Natalie! I love seeing the juvenile RB - don't think I've ever seen one in the wild. You know, what struck Elliott struck me, also - the beautiful fish-scale feathering on the turkey. And the babies! They have quail-like bodies and chicken-like heads! Legs belong to their parents, I guess!

No joke, I have two Siberian Huskies shedding, one has a double coat, in this hot SC weather. Now I know why we don't usually come down from June thru September. It's hot and humid.

I am no-tech most of the time. I can do Internet, etc. I can do more than I admit. However, I don't do cell phones or digital cameras much. I really try to live a very simple life. My mantra - if the colorists could do without it, then so could I. I think happiness is found in a simpler life. Anyway, I feel lucky because I can leech off you people. I just watched James's beautiful presentation. I looked at Becky's great internet site that I don't take the time to find. Kristi, I'm much like you. I normally use the computer for email, information searches on Google, eBay occasionally, to add to my collection of vintage post cards of the area I live in, and for compiling research projects and storing copies of photos and inventory of our local Historical Society. When it comes to technical problems, PDFs, JPGs, etc. I am totally lost. I don't have a cell phone (no signal within a few miles of me), and I had no idea what YouTube was until I joined the chat here. I still have no idea what iPods, iPads, Blue Tooth, text messaging, etc. are all about. But, I like nature and people and I've found both here. Life is Good!!

Mary Carroll. If you were asking me if you got the music right, the answer is maybe.
That's another great piece of music, but it's not the score in my little video. I thought the music title would show but it didn't, so I'll leave it as a mystery for now. Maybe another CM fan will recognize it. It's from a very popular set of four violin concertos, with certain ones being more popular than the others depending on the time of year. :)
Away again, back later...

Rhonda, my husband had BAD psoriasis (and probably arthritis although has never been checked) but since being on Embrel combination it has cleared up about 99%. At first I was giving him 2 injections a week but for the last year or so it has only been once a week. Have you tried it?
Good luck with your appointment!

So far, I'm on Methotrexate (1.25 mg shot a week), folic acid, and hydrocortisone. I take the combination and it has really stopped the psoriasis, and helped slow the arthritis. We've been avoiding Embrel and such. I've had pneumonia several times (asthma since I was 2)...and the risk of infection is a lot higher with those type of drugs for me. Plus, the benefit that all my drugs are generic. Saves a lot of money. I also take a couple of kinds of pain pills to keep swelling and pain in check.
Wow...that sounds worse all written out than it really is to live with!

What's so sad is he's 24 yrs old, married and has a 2yr old daughter that knows her daddy is sick, but don't understand how serious. Pray they can get his leukemia in remission, until they can find a (bone marrow) match for him. I will keep updates on Casey at the Eagle site in Cal., when I hear something from his parents. I know today they did a bone biopsy on him this is so the doctor can decide whether or not he will have to go through more chemo treatments again. Continue to pray for Casey and his family.

We have a pair of Great Horned Owls who live in a gully near by...they are beautiful when we get a glimpse of them flying. The only bad thing is they will "catch" small cats and dogs if we don't keep them in at night. Usually, they are happy with rabbit, rats, and such...but, a couple of neighbors have lost cats 😊.

Oh those Dutch owlets are soooo cute! The bottom of the box looks vaguely familiar. Does the mother owl spend as much time with her babies as Molly did? This isn't good--am starting to feel the pangs of the mothering thing and I just got over the obsession to log on here every hour or so!

Just stopped in to see what was going on before I drift off to an afternoon in the office. Love the references to Maria Montessori and Charlotte Mason great people to learn about if you have children. Now I am off to do what it is I do. Which as I have been informed by my child is pretty darn boring because all I do is sit there and listen to people talk 😊

Anyone know why in chats like this they don't have spellcheck? It always drives me nuts. 😊 In everyting else these days simple typos gets caught and at least identified so you can fix them, but here and in facebook, your typos are out there for everyone to see. 😊 I am a very good speller, but not such a great typist and some words ALWAYS come out wrong. 😊 Then I have to spend time checking my comments and get frustrated if I post something with a typo. 😊 The perfectionists in me. 😊 (Hope I caught all of them here)

We need fewer drifting straws on the stream of American business, and more discontented thinkers who listen thoughtfully to both sides of our national debates. Reading "Ulisses" this Bloomsday may be more than just a literarv observance. Think of it as an act of fiscal responsibility.

As someone who taught in a Communist country for 3 years, I can tell you that that's not true. Students in that country could study any of the liberal arts and were free to pursue artistic careers. However, they were in general not taught critical thinking, as most students are not taught here. And, as is the case here, most of them were herded into technical and business careers when they graduated.

Ha ha, I had quite a class load! I taught listening and speaking, composition, American and British literature, and a nifty lit course that they called "video appreciation," which was basically just showing movies. For fun I had a Scottish country dance troupe and ran a Wednesday night lab where we did things like read poetry and sing songs and play games. These were English majors. I'm still in touch with some of them. A lot of them have turned out to be millionaires under the new "capitalism with Chinese characteristics" system.

I had a romance with late imperial China at one point. Read every book I could find. It was triggered by Bertolucci's film The Last Emperor. One of those passions one develops along the way, then somehow gets incorporated and drawn on from time to time. You couldn't in your wildest dreams invent a more fanciful fairy tale than what went on in the Forbidden City in the 19th century.

I fell in love with ancient China because of a portfolio of reproductions that my mother had from her college days. When I was little, little, little, say 2 or 3, I would sit for hours and pore over those pictures. The best museum I ever went to in my life (and I've been to a few) was the Shanghai Museum. I haven't seen the new one and don't plan to go back to China ever again, but the old one was absolutely magnificent, not just from an artistic viewpoint but from a curatorial one. You walk in totally ignorant of Chinese art and you walk out almost an expert, just because of the way the museum is organized.

So now we know why your avatar is your talisman, Elliott.

Molle, I have tried twice to post something. 😞 I think the second time it was too long.

My mother finished her growing up in post WW2 Eastern Europe.

Basically, it seems to me that the 7 Liberal Arts were meant to be integrated with one another and that rarely happens even in free countries anymore. There are a myriad of reasons for it (which might lead to a political discussion). Obviously critical thinking is needed by anyone who is trying to integrate subjects.

I can use my brother as an example, he is doing research on lightning but his background is in physics. That makes him an "odd bird" so to speak because he isn't trained in meteorology yet he is studying the weather, from the perspective of a physicist.

I don't believe that capitalism = unbridled greed. Our founding fathers believed in self-government (translated as self-controlled), something we are sorely lacking these days in a name-it, claim-it, get-rich-quick on the lottery culture.

It's true, Barb, greed knows no nationalities. Congrats to your brother for having a holistic perspective. Irene Pepperberg, the woman who studied Alex the talking African grey, has the same problem. Her background was in chemistry, I think, but she ended up studying avian cognition. She used the same hypothesis-testing and observing skills that she learned as a chemist (or whatever she started out to be) but in a new context. And she has had a really hard time finding universities to call home because of the narrow perspectives in academia.

I was fortunate enough to go to a college that had a year-long interdisciplinary course requirement for all freshmen and that didn't just accept but encouraged interdisciplinary approaches.

Molle, for a number of years, I was harpsichordist (at times spinettist) of the chamber orchestra of the European Center for Nuclear Research (the CERN) in Geneva. The musicians (other than myself) were all CERN physicists. The orchestra had been founded in the 60's by the then Director General of the CERN, Vicki Weisskopf, who still led the orchestra in my day. Inversely, I am a classically-trained musician, but am naturally strong in mathematics. The neurobiological correlation between mathematics and music is well established. (None of this is boasting, it is just a statement of fact.) So your observations about Pepperberg ring true.

Well, it was Weisskopf's vision. He was a first-rate cellist. And it so happened there was a sufficient corpus of CERN scientists who were also musically trained that he could form a small orchestra. He built a home in the foothills of the alps, outside Geneva, overlooking the Rhone valley. The center room of the house was a small concert hall. We gave several concerts there a year. It was quite fabulous now that I think back to it. Weisskopf died in 2002.

Barb, it's always fascinating to me to learn of these wonderful visionaries who came along through history. I've even had the honor of knowing a couple myself. Another one was Maria Montessori, whose biography is quite fascinating. My 15 year-old niece went to Montessori school through age 14 and now is in what is reputed to be the best public high school in Wisconsin. Thanks for teaching us about Miss Mason!

I always find it so fascinating that Ms Montessori and Rudolf Steiner were both part of the Theosophical Society and yet came up with such different educational philosophies--almost divergent. Of course Steiner went on to start his own religious group but it's still an interesting study how the cultures they were in influenced their methods.

I lived for many years in Switzerland, in fact did all of my studies there. I had a number of Steiner acquaintances, among whom was a family in my circle of intimates. I used to spend weekends with them in Lausanne. They had small children. They had small children at the time. It was interesting to observe their household and the interaction among family members. The husband was Israeli and the wife was Danish/British. They were both members of the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande.

Have been stopping by frequently all day. Have a carpenter here tearing off and replacing a small balcony off from one of the upstairs bedrooms, so it's been a little noisy. He is working from a staging, but there has been some foot traffic by my computer station in the hallway. Will be back again later. Keep up the good work. Looks like the PSO Welcome Center today - everyone handing out "maps", directions and friendly chat.

This balcony should have been replaced when we moved here 8 years ago, but we did new windows, carpeting, kitchen flooring, the house painted and other things. It was a project that our son-in-law (a carpenter/house builder) was going to do last Fall, but weather wasn't good on many week ends. Now, with him still facing a LONG recovery from his horrible accident in April, we decided to hire a local fellow to do it.

Never mind - saw the description. I mentioned yesterday that there seemed to be a full layer of whole pellets. It doesn't seem possible that they came from the present owls. You mentioned that the nest had been used before. But, wouldn't it be likely that the wildlife center would clean out the old nesting material each year (otherwise the whole building would smell and there would be rotting from the damp material). I was also wondering if the wildlife center might put clean pellets in there ???
Today, 10:05:27 - Flag - Like - Reply

Cheryl Owen
Reading the information on the Barn Owl Trust site it says that the nesting boxes only really need cleaning out every 2-3 years - the boxes are bigger than Mollys I think so the pellets go a little further - I would imagine they made provision for the owl box when putting the building up with extra insulation (smell proofing!) I would have thought they have access somehow to the box from inside as well, all though it doesn't look obvious from that photo and the camera in the box. There is a live web chat on that site in about 50 minutes - might be a good question to ask them!

Forgot to say, UPS came so I ran out to get my t-shirt...opened it up, and there was a mug! A nice mug, just not what I ordered. Even after my husband emailed them to tell them we ordered a t-shirt! Now what... keep the mug, try for a t-shirt again?

Good morning, y'owl. I actually slept in this morning, and I STILL feel tired. I have the Dorset owls on, that loud squawking is better than the silence! Funny how we've fallen in love with such an annoying sound! My favorite is the Tel Aviv owls.

Everyone is family with the phrase "Where's Wadio?" I think the new phrase to be just as popular is "Who's Dudley?".
