Ingrid Good morning; Didn't get to chat last night but am back this morning. Yesterday all I saw on the archive video was Molly resting. Good to see her again now with the first egg. Hope if we ever get to see this all again I would love to be here for the beginning to the perfect ending last time. It's a beautiful day here in California but after watching the news the weather is not good in other parts of the country. So sorry for the tornados in Minnesota and the loss of life and property there.

Good morning, Mary Carroll. I think I'm in the minority here, but I think my favorite "go to" owl cams are the ones in the UK - especially the Barn Owl Trust in Cornwall and the Dorsett Wildlife Trust Today, 07:05:43 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by Mary Carroll (the Shadow) Mary Carroll (the Shadow)

I like the Dorset cam because the owls sound reminds me of M&M's babies. The Israeli babies are cut e but they sound different and it pains me to see how hot they are. I fear Molly's next clutch may have the same problem ...where ever they are.

Today, 06: 45:05 - Flag - Like - Reply Some final thoughts for the night (and there is some speculation here). With the archived video today, appearances by Eric, etc. I wouldn't be surprised if there might be some other "reruns" of favorite segments of the Molly story, etc. There needs to be some incentive to have people stay in the chat rooms in order to maximize sales of the books, Austin's video, cafe press and transferit items, etc. It's called marketing. There isn't a whole worldwide audience out there except those who have participated here. I'm in no way being critical of these marketing efforts at all. Just saying. OK - I'mdone for Good morning all - especially our friends from the UK!! Good morning y'owl. My best friend got some very upsetting news yesterday afternoon late, and I wound up taking off. When I came back, Molly was trying to figure out what to do with her first egg? Is that extra footage Carlos played, or is that at the end of part 2?

Yesterday's movie was filmed in February when Molly first moved in. Is that what you meant? Today, 05:23:20 - Flag - Like - Reply Cinda Browne

I was here most of the day yesterday, and when I ran out, the blue box was saying the archival footage was ending at 2pm PDT, which was about the time I left. When I got back, I ducked (or owled!) back in briefly and there was still a tape of Molly with an egg running. Was that a third tape Carlos played for us? Guess I should probably go check the PDFs on the wiki? Today, 05:35:48 - Flag - Like - Reply

                               Oh I asked my husband about the Noctilucent clouds - and he said that no one really knows why they form- when I looked on the internet it basically did say that and that they form around 50 miles high so they aren't visible to the naked eye during daylight - you can only see themwhen its getting dark and the sun still catches them - was going to book out for them last night - but couldn't stay awake long enough!!!\\

                               Good morning Cheryl. I've been in and out most of the day, so I don't know if anyone saw McGee, but it was fun watching Molly roll that first egg around trying to figure out what it was; and what an I suppose to do with it.

                        Sitting at red lights can be awesome. This week I watched ordinary birds do extraordinary things.
                        Two young, fuzzy starlings kept bonking into a solid fence about 4 feet up because they couldn't get enough lift from the the ground to top. They sat on grass stunned then tried again and again until they reached the top of the fence to join parents. They looked so proud of themselves.
                       An adult crow kept approaching the body of its dead companion on the side of the road, obviously hit by car. The crow would hop to the body, lean down and turn its head sideways, resting its cheek on the dead crow's face.
                       Extraordinary!

                               I'm reading a book at the moment about Corvids (Corvus - A Life with Birds) and it was just saying that they do appear to feel loss' and go into mourning when their mate dies - I know we're not supposed to put human emotions onto these birds - but its very difficult when you witness something like that!!

       yup - going to take me some time to catch up. ... I told myself ... no - won't be on here until --- maybe tomorrow afternoon - and look whooos "bitering" again ...... hmmm. Gotta go grab some zzzzz's ... WHICH - now that I think about it - downtown chicago only had sightings of seagulls and pigeons, with a few random mallards and geese in the parks. WHAT a shame!

Some final thoughts for the night (and thre is some speculation here). With the archived video today, appearances by Eric, etc. I wuokin't be surprised if there might be some other "reruns" of favorite segments of the Molly story, etc. There needs to be some incentive to have people stay in the chat rooms in order to maximize sales of the books, Austin's video, cafe press and transferit items, etc. It's called marketing. There isn't a whole worldwide audience out there except those who have participated here. I'm in no way being critical of these marketing efforts at all. Just saying. OK - I'm done for the night. Don't keep JH up celebrating too late tonight - all of us "seniors" need proper rest

       I hope you are right, Lynda! In this case, I don't think any of us will mind more "marketing" if it means some reruns are shown (or even a newshow begins!) 😃

                           No ,I'll check it out tomorrow. This all really started when JH posted a picture this morning during a discussion of RV's. His picture was of a little wooden house on the bed of a truck. I commented later that I had seen one similar at a campground during an RV trip in the 1980's (in a rentaIRV) up the coast of CA. Actually the other postings of "little houses" have been interesting. Some great pictures of some that were or are being made for earthquake victims in Haiti - anything would be bettr than the tarps they are trying to live under !\,!

                           Lynda - Not too long ago I was reading about the houses that were built for victims of the 1905 San Francisco earthquake. Not only are some of them still in use, but have sold for big $$!

                    James, if it's your birthday, Happy Birthday, and many hundreds more!!
                    My dad died 13 years ago today. I wish everyone in this roomcould have known him. There should be a national holiday for his birthday! I hear his voice as if he just left the room. I hope everyone here has or had a dad as wonderful as mine! Happy going to sleep day, Dad! I love you more than words can say!!

                           I know what you mean. I had a dad like that. His birthday is June 30th and he passed away on July 30th in 1989. Next year would have been his 100th birthday. He was 50 when I was born. Time eases the pain but I miss him dearly.

Here is one for the correct date...." i see a dark stranger..."
                            Experimentation is especially important to you, as you are feeling adventurous and courageous. The unknown or unexplored is alluring, and you might make some plans to travel. You have a lot on your mind and are itching to share it.

                            Labsolutely agree with you that it could be a combination of those factors. Lalso think that it could be a combination of the factors you discussed and the factors I discussed. In fact, the more I think about it, there could be any number of other factors which we aren't even aware of that could affect the way we're looking at this scenario.
                            In fact, I think I now have a headache!

                            You're right, Jan. I think even the light source and camera type are playing a role in the apparent difference in appearance. Notice the Tel Aviv camera is much more sensitive to changes in light levels, it adjusts exposure very rapidly and doesn't over expose the brightest object in the box, unlike the IR camera that Carlos was using. The twin IR lights in the small San Marcos box helped to sculpt the owls in light, very much like a portrait photographer would do. The TA box only has a single light source, and it is inline with the camera lens. That makes the subjects appear very different.

Looking in on the other chat the MODs are saying that one other reason Carlos removed the gag shag is because it was so high it was covering the lower night camera and the day camera lens was so dirty he wasn't sure how we were seeing anything at all through it. 😯
One other chatter said they had an owl box and they cleaned it out every time. If they didn't they could smell it all the way from the house.

Well, that was one theory I put forth--cheaper and easier to clean the box than to cut new holes for better camera angles.

      However, I met one chatter on the other site who was very angry that Carlos had cleaned it out and felt like he had evicted Molly. This was a person considering comeing to the seatle get-together but then said he had to back out after this.
       But the person who said they could smell it said that the fact that they cleaned it after every clutch never prevented the owls from coming back, even though the barn owl sites suggest doing it only once a year in Oct-Dec.
       The grumpy guy is still on the chat over there, so maybe he has been reasured by this other owl box owner. I hope so.

Good evening from Montreal, I have a new avatar, it is the backside of my daughters horse, JJ. i totaly forgot about this footage, and It was so nice to check in and see sweet sweet Molly. Unfortunately for a second I thought it was the cleaned out box with Molly doing her thing for a second time. Joy and disapointment in the same heartbeat.

       James - I understand it's your birthday! Hope you're having a very happy one, and many more - even better ones - to come! Is this the one where the last digit rolls over, or do both of them roll over? You don't have to answer

I sure do miss the Carlos updated pictures we got so used to every night. Heck, I miss the whole thing. I'm still not over not seeing our babies every night. I can't believe it but I still get choked up. Does anyone else feel that way??

Good evening everyone. Has a PDF been made by anyone else since this morning?
I stepped out for a softball game earlier and ended up being treated to a birthday dinner, sort of unexpectedly.
I'll go make one now, if it hasn't already been handled.

        I wonder why Carlos never came to this chat room? When I got the link to this site it brought right to here... I didn't even know there was another chat room for quite a while...Odd how there were so many places to chat...There's the Streamtoo...Well, he missed out on some very interesting and wonderful comments in this chat...
        And I hope the video will be re-run for the entire event...that would be great...until Carlos turns the cameras back on for Molly and McGee's second time around....See, you can't keep an eternal optimist down...

Sue from Syracuse: I read An Owl and His Girl. It was a great book. Since I have two parrots and have had birds for a very long time, I know and think all birds are intelligent, but this was a great read and very insightful into her life with Wesley.
No matter what you think of Ms O'Brien (I never read/heard any of the controversial stuff online), she really sacrificied her life for that owl and he loved her just as much in return.
