OK, one last post about the Dutch owls. Here is my original question to them. My original question was "Do the baby owls all have names?" Then you read up backwards, just like here:

boekgooi 08:15, donderdag 17 juni 2010 Gossie means "Pity"?

boekgooi08:06, donderdag 17 juni 2010 Normaly not, only the small one is called Gossie.

Next about "Ukkie" on the Dutch site. That's just a term of endearment for the smallest one, but his name is "Gossie." I signed up on the chat the other night and did the Google Translator to talk back and forth, but then a nice person chatted in English with me. He gave me the names of all the owlets but I forgot to save them locally. They would be in the PDF history.

I was just thinking EXACTLY the same thing about the sound. I was calling it the "Hebrew" dialect! But you're right, Sawwhet, the nest box is constructed very differently, and we don't know whether it is sitting in the open air, or atop a pole Today, 18:51:30 – Flag – Like – Reply Liked by 💽 Lynda C

And the mic and recording equipment are probably different too.

I think it's very likely we would see differences in behavior. So many factors can influence that. We would have to see several owl pairings from each area though to know if it's regional or just one owl family vs another. As far as the standing on one leg thing goes: maybe the TA boxes are on very stable posts that don't sway so it doesn't trigger that roosting mechanism they use to keep from falling off a branch. Does that make sense? I haven't seen those owls swaying like our owls did so I figured there is either very little breeze or the boxes are very stable. Also, only twice I have seen two adult owls in the box. Usually it is the lighter adult delivering treats. So is the female lighter than the male, or is the male delivering most of the treats?

Lynda C But, Max wasn't actually in the box much at this stage, was he ?? The male may still be delivering food to the Tel Aviv box, but could he be leaving them in the area to the left and the female bringing them in - another "room" perhaps. ?? All speculation 🙁 😕 I wish there was moe information posted on the web site about the owls.

Lynda C It looks to me like the nest might be in a building of some type (barn-type structure) - the support timber on the back wall and seemingly another "room" to the left. And, yes, Molly's owls were on one leg frequently at this stage ??? Today, 19:12:21 – Flag – Like – Reply

They sure are a huddled mass of fur and fluff aren't they ?? Cute. I have a friend who has had an albino grey squirrel in her yard for 3 years (she thinks one may have died or taken by a predator, but another one appeared the next year). It is there summer and winter and she watches it take leaves up a tree to build a nest in the branches. Now she has two albinos running around - an adult and a young one. Not sure how "true" the albinoism is - they are both all white and have the pink eyes though. She also thinks the adult may have mated with a true grey squirrel. I have no idea about the genetics or whether they can have a litter with some grey and some white or not Today, 18:25:05 - Flag - Like - Reply

Most interesting !! Then it's a vegetable and not a true melon ? I'm probably one of the most uninspired cooks you know. I'mnot very adventuresome when it comes to "new" foods and tastes. I'm not particularly fond of either cumin or chili powder. My daughter shakes her head at me because we eat so much of the same old, same old that we both grew up with. Hubby will eat most anything, but prefers the "familiar". She has a degree in culinary arts (never pursued it as a vocation though) and is always trying new things. She has ingredients in her refrig. and cupboards that I never heard of 🐸 Today, 18:34:48 - Flag - Like - Reply

I only eat it once in a while.

Re: Dutch Little Owl and domestic violence.

I watched all the vids from the very first. It's quite a drama. There was a pigeon trying to nest in the foyer, and I think Momma owl was tired of dealing with her, so sent Daddy owl out to take care of it. There were several bird fights over property rights. The owls won out, not necessarily due to might, but because a crow came up and stole the 3 pipeon eags (plus one that was at the entrance and was abandoned) and a stashed mouse of the owls'. After that the pigeon kinda disappears. If you can watch it. The camera man fast forwards the slow parts, so it's mostly action.

Hope all is well with Merlin and Colleen. Today, 17:55:43 - Flag - Like - Reply

Lynda, a few hours ago you remarked how interesting it was to observe the behaviors of the different owl families we have seen, especially as we compare them to OUR owl family.

Someone (I don't remember who) provided the following link to a website titled "The 35 Races of the Barn Owl". The North American barn owl is apparently the Tyto alba pratincola. There is another of these 35 species which is grouped under the "African Barn Owb", and include the Tyto alba erlangeri, which is native to Saudi Arabia, Lebanon, Syria, Israel, Iraq, and Iran; this is the barn owl being used by the farmers in Israel for integrated pest management.

My point is that perhaps there are personality traits unique to each of these species. (Post continued...) Today, 17:52:02 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by 🔛 Norma Trumble 🎦 K8orlando (same old Owlo!)

Our San Marcos owl family was strikingly docile and friendly. I do not recall ever seeing the siblings fight over a morsel of food. And they seemed always
There is much more accression and sniping. I am to wait patiently as the strips of food were divided among themby Molly. Not so with our Israeliowlets. There is much more aggression and sniping. I am not saying that is a bad thing. It is just different.

Perhaps there ARE "personality" traits inherent in these different species.

Ah! It was YOU, YTQ! Thank you so much for adding to our erudition. I was a little uncomfortable with the term "Races" of barn owl. I'm not enough of a biologist to know if that is appropriate or not. But I thought the concept of different "strains" of barn ow's that have evolved in solation having different personality traits was an interesting one

I used races in quotes because that's what the article called it. I thought it was an odd term and felt more comfortable with species, or family, but was also uncomfortable with changing the terminology. I mean, what do I know! Not a biologist, but amin Love with Barn Ows! Today, 18:14:59 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by 🎆 Elliott

Sa wwhet I had wondered about the different behaviors in food sharing (or not) also. It seems to be considerably different with the group. You may have hit on a plausible explanation. Thanks for looking that up and sharing. Today, 18:03:10 - Flag - Like - Reply

Lynda C Thanks, Ellot. I saw that earlier and forgot to save it. I'll check it out more thorough a little later. I knew there were different species and sub-groups. Obviously, birds and animals adapt to their environment, too. They probably share some traits, too. The one I noticed specifically ws the laying down -"face plant". When Molly's owlets did that some researched information and some "aliances" said it wasn't common or normal. My thoughts is - just how many barn owl boxes were studied 24/7 as we did with Molly to come up with what's" normal". Thoughts going astray here - forgive my "ramble" Today, 18:08:21 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by 🌉 YTQ

Ive watched the growth of both Red-tail Hawk and Peregrine Falcon chicks, from egg to fledge, and they walk on their 'haunches' (not my word; I picked it up from the red-tail expert), like the owlets, until their legs were strong enough to support them. Also like the owlets, their feet are huge in proportion to their body size, and they look kinda heavy to lift up and put down!! Today, 17:57:42 - Flag - Like - Reply

Fat and fluffy ones kept eating them. Finally, Runt got himself out of the fluff pile and got to the mouse. I was sitting there wishing one of the older ones would pick it off for him. K8orlando (same old Owio!) We've been through 2 bad years... and the 1 before that was tough too. Family illnesses and deaths, financial crisis, lost jobs, injuries. I know it seems overwhelming and at times it is. You simply can't deal with it all or fix it. When we had those moments my husband and I would look at one another and say "I'm a duck and this will flow off my back like water off a duck." That got shortened to "I'm a duck, I'm a duck, I'm a duck!" Which always got us laughing. Now we always find duck cards for each other. It's like our secret mantra for getting through bad times. Take a deep breath, hold on tight, and know it WILL get better. Sometimes you have to count it as Success just to get through it. I have to leave soon. On my computer with windows XP, you click on the print screen key. (Some have to hold down Control and then dick on Prt Screen but I don't. Must be a seting difference.) It doesn't look like anything happens at that point. Then open whatever Paint or Photo Shop program you have and go to the Edit menu and Paste or Paste New Image. The screen you captured shows up. Many folks are fooled because nothing happens visibly when you click on the Print Screen key. It only shows up when you paste the image somewhere. As I said I don't have to worry about F lock - maybe that's a laptop thing.

Lynda, you are right. I saw the notice and completely forgot about it since I never buy the stuff. Now I have to make sure I stay close to the RDA for sodium. Very tricky. Shouldn't be so tough to be "normal".

Lynda C I have no medical problems precluding eating some of that stuff. I just don't like a lot of canned and processed foods - too salty, too many preservatives and chemicals I've never heard of, etc. Sure, I eat some canned products, deli meats and bacon once in a while, have a Big Mac occasionally and other things that probably aren't "good" for me; but not a constant diet of the stuff. I prefer fresh meat & poultry (locally raised when I can) and vegetables

Richer conversations that expand and add to the experience. I completely agree that while Molly and her babies brought us here, Carlos and Donna kept us here. We had a problemonce with CafePress mugs. The solid color wasn't even and there were dark shadows to be seen in the design. They replaced them for us as we had intended to give them as gifts and felt they weren't up to par for the price we paid.

If you want your mug issue resolved you will need to contact CafePress. We had no complaint with how they handled our problem. Today, 16:28:19 - Flag - Like - Reply

It has been interesting to see the different behaviors, noises and family dynamics of the other owl boxes compared to what we saw in Molly's box. IVe been checking on the Dutch box, the Tel Aviv box and two boxes in the UK and there are some differences. I don't wonder ornothologists don't always know what "normal" behavior is. Some would have said it was "abnormal" for owls to lay down to sleep as we saw with Molly's owlets, but I've seen the same behavior in some of the other boxes.

Well sorry to blast in and out and start rumors about disappearing posts! FOR THE RECORD: Nothing got deleted. My browser was acting funny and covered up some posts briefly, (like how the "likes" disappear) but when I refreshed they were back. Besides, only people can delete their own posts, and HF will not delete anything unless it was flagged multiple times and is truly inappropriate. AND, HF does not monitor this site 24/7, so it couldn't have happened that fast anyways.

NEXT, I want to state for the record that I posted a reply to someone as a joke that Carlos was having his neighbor turn off the video tape yesterday and would be over the California border when it was finished. NOT TRUE too! It was only a joke.

I agree, and actually the number of people who's lives have changed for the better for what Carlos and Donna have shared with us, people who have been suffering loss, illness, loneliness, sadness, or have discovered or rediscovered hidden talents, the friends that we have all made through this, the list goes on and on, is absolutely priceless. From the first day I discovered this site - and Carlos came on first thing in the morning with his Molly Mug and had a little chat with us in the morning with Donna washing up in the background, completely won me over, it was all so natural and there was absolutely no hidden agenda in there at all - I completely admire the pair of them for what they have given us all, and if they make some money out of it then good thev deserve it!

I REALLY HATE the way any post that expresses a different opinion gets deleted. It drives me CRAZY. Why can't we be adults and let people express their opinions whether we agree or not. We can always counter with our own but this deleting stuff is childish. Today, 15:31:08 - Flag - Like - Reply

Mary Carroll, Ian's posts are still there and so is Judy's in the basement (If that is the one being referred to). I didn't sense there was a lot of hostility, just people trying to clarify that Carlos did not start this adventure with Molly and McGee to make money. He only added "merchandise" because a lot of people bugged him to do it

PART1 (of 3) I'm sorry... but I may risk showing my anger and putting some of my new friendships here in jeopardy but, I feel the need to respond to Judy about one of her posts (now deep in the basement). In regard to: Carlos making money via this website ... If he is or if he isn't, what does it matter to any visitor to this free website?You were not forced into making ANY donation or buying ANY product from Molly, The Barn Owl, Inc. He is a born Capitalist (go read his bio). He, obviously, believes in putting a value on his creativity and charging people for it.

PART2 (of 3) continued from above ... When you do that for a lifetime, you can accumulate enough wealth and property and free time which, in turn, allows you to buy a lovely (owl magnet) estate in beautiful San Marcos, Ca... it al lows you to purchase the DELUXE owl box and put it on a 15 ft pole, a full set of the best cameras and a Jungle Gym playground. We have all benefited from Carlos' natural aptitudes as a savvy businessman. If you prefer a measly shoest ring experience, go visit the Tel Avivsite. But, before you do, visit the store and buy a Molly mugand show your support for a true American Capitalist entrepreneur and HERO, my hero, Carlos Royal. Today, 15:17:57 - Flag - Like - Reply

PART3 (of 3) PS: Also, look at all of the others who he is trying to assist and encourage with their own business activities: the author, the artist, the cartoonist, the song-writer, the grandson, the town of San Marcos. When I first came to this website, I was inspired by Molly and her dedication. In time, I transferred that appreciation and respect to Carlos and Donna, for their devotion, creativity, generosity and humor. These people have made a valuable impact on my life. It's beyond Molly; it's for who they are as people.

If Someone says, "there should be a book, or a movie or reruns" we are glad that they appear and of course, we wouldn't expect Sir Carlos of San Marcos to provide everything for free. Correct me if I am wrong. My memory (bad and getting worse) is that my old program would let me enlarge a photo and let me specify the number of pixels (it extrapolated and sometimes what I got was weird).

My husband said our old program probably would not work with my current operating system (Windows Vista). Today, 14:55:42 - Flag - Like - Reply

JH (ÖÝÖ)

See my note below also. Yes you can use almost any editing program to enlarge the dimensions (in pixels) of any digital image. You can enlarge a digital image all you want, but you can never maintain clarity or regain lost detail. If the actual information (pixels, detail, etc) are not in the original, they will never be in an enlarged copy of the original. For print work, you really must start out with a high quality original image, or either do a lot of tedious artwork to a smaller image that would make it acceptable for reproduction. Sawwhet Ever heard the saying "you had to be there"? This is such an instance. Many of us watched this most beautiful owl family grow from eggs to fledging. We watched this family for four months, sometimes shedding tears and sometime just about falling off our chairs with laughter. All the while this owl family became more and more endearing. And perhaps best of all, we shared this wonderful experience with hundreds and thousands of people all over the globe, many of whom have become very good friends. What you see here are friends keeping in touch, remeniscing, and watching some preegg footage of Momma owl...Molly who stole our hearts. You had to be there and WE WERE.

I got my mug from CafePress. The colors are a little off and the image is a little fuzzy but what the heck. I'll think of the owls when I have hot chocolate. I may try again with a different photo. I may try Zazzle. Today, 13:47:37 - Flag - Like - Reply

Hey, just popped back in while I eat lunch. Did you use my collage image for that mug? If so, can you describe the issue with the colors? I can understand the "fuzzy" as I haven't put up a high resolution copy of that image, which means the image they used was under spec for such work. Some places actually do some creative/maintenance work and adjust the image files before printing, unlike CP. The Molly mugs at Transferit have been done professionally, with those thoughts taken into consideration. Today, 13:54:44 - Like - Reply - Delete

Mary Carroll (the Shadow) James,

My cup is darker, fuzzy and really red-shifted.

James.

Is there any way to enlarge this photo and keep the resolution? It was a small photo to begin with.

I was trying to make the light parts of the moon a pale yellow-orange.

Kathleen worked on it but the image of the owl came out fuzzy.

As another request: I know you are busy but if you could change only the light colors of the moon to a pale yellow-orange, I would be really grateful.

With my ancient program (Photo Deluxe) on my old laptop (which died) I could tell the program to change only the pixels of a particular color to any other color I wanted.

My husband just said Photo Shop (which is more expensive) will do the same thing.

Once an image has been reduced in physical size/number of pixels, there is no way to increase the size AND regain the lost detail. We can make that picture larger all we want, but you just can't bring back lost information/detail. The bigger you make it, the worse it will look. 😕 Today, 14:36:13 - Like - Reply - Delete

The color sounds like an issue with the color profile assigned to the image. Being that it was an image from Carlos' camera, it likely had a specific color profile assigned to it and the CP system assumed a different (generic, sRGB) color profile. Happens all the time with digital printing. That's where it really pays to have a person looking over each order. It could also be the base color of the mug affecting the final color of the image. The fuzzy factor is probably still from using a low resolution image. For printing sharp images, the image really needs to be much, much larger than one viewable in "normal size on a computer screen. Normally, files for printing are roughly 5-10x larger than what you would view on screen. Today, 14:21:33 - Like - Reply - Delete

I tried that one out on a mug, and it didn't seem to fit. I got the one of Max and Patti in the Palms, like Owlo did. Here is a picture of mine. I bye it ! Only thing is, I wish it wrapped around the mug a little more! Also got one of Merlin. ..which is perfect!

I, too, hate to open URL's when they are posted or when I'm scrolling through chat because I lose my place in the chat stream and have to start at the top (even when I open them in a new window). For ones I want to go back to and look at later I just highlight them and copy them into an open "Owl Box" document in Word. I can access them directly from there (hold "Ctrl" and click on the URL). Some, I have been moving to an open "Plain Text" email draft so that they are unformatted and I can repost themhere.

Oh YES, Becky !! Who on earth hasn't cheered for Susan ?! She's everybody's hero! I loved all the songs on her CD "I Dreamed a Dream". I thought it was brilliantly curated. My absolutely favorite, though, was her remake of The Monkee's hit "Daydream Believer", which she turned into the most exquisite ballad. To me, it is a song of a plain Jane, who probably could never get the boyfriend she wanted, except in her daydreams, where she could be anything she wanted!

JH (ÖÝÖ) A couple reasons.

1) this is the first camera, which came installed with the owlbox. It is a poor quality IR camera with low resolution and iffy sharpness/focus.

2) this is actually a VCR recording of the video feed from that camera, which again lowers the resolution and affects the sharpness and contrast. Today, 09:58:43 - Like - Reply - Delete Liked by KoveYourDNA@yahoo.com NovePourDNA@yahoo.com

According to the stats at the top of the page, it was the first egg that broke. Maybe Molly never acted motherly toward that egg because she could tell that it wan't a good one. Maybe it didn't smell or sound right and she didn't want to nuture it. ??? Today, 09: 37:56 – Flag – Like – Reply

I think I am going to get an owIbox!! Yeah!!!! DH said we could and we jus t have to do some snooping re: State, Federal laws and the Right box! I've been on the owl box site and there is one that would work well for our site, but I would make some more ledges and flight pads. We learned a lot from Sir Carlo Royal and his box. I doubt that we will have a cam, but who know!? We live in an area that grows rye grass seed. I need to talk to the Ag Dept to see if mouse poison is used. If so, no owl box. Also, there is a creek about 100 yards from our house, with a little wooded area, and another feild that have horses on it in summer. I think there is a lot of prey that could sustain a family. I wouldn't want to start this and have them all starve to death! Today, 09:00:32 - Flag - Unlike - Reply

These are from a couple of Owl Pellets I picked up at work today, there were more bones than this - I just picked out the bigger ones - and I didn't photograph the maggots!! It looked like there were a few birds on the menu - but I couldn't tell you what - and there was one very obvious tail, so definately a mouse consumed at some point!

Praying mantis are great for gardens as they are known to eat aphids and other bugs. You can actually order from Garden Suppliers in the early spring. They are shipped as egg cases and need 6 weeks of warm weather to hatch. An egg case can have as many as 50-100 mantis bables. They are really cute when they are first born (hatched). Lynda C I think they are WONDERFUL photos, Kristi. I have always lived on a lake. As a youngster the area of the lake we lived on was fairly shallow with lots of pond illies, some old stumps, etc. - a perfect place for turtles to sun - but have never seen them on top of one another!. We used to have some giant snappers that crossed the yard and even the road to lay their eggs. Not many turtles in our small farm pond, but lots of frogs and the music of the peepers in the Spring. We don't have mantis here, so your photo was a treat. Thanks. Today, 08:26:51 - Flag - Like - Reply

Mary Carroll (the Shadow) I love the sound of peepers. we have streams on all 4 sides of the land (2 dry up in the summer) and I want peepers sooo bad. A few years ago there was one lonely peeper singing away but no one joined him/her and the singing stopped after a few days. I am afraid something ate him/her. Thanks to my grandfather, I have a proud display of antiered mass very similar to that hanging out in my shed. It came out of the Shenandoah Valley apple orchards in WV, back in the late 60's. I only wish the taxidermy of the 60's was such that it could have preserved the whole thing for this long. Many years ago we detached and saved the antlers only, as the rest of the mount had deteriorated so badly. Today, 08:14:07 - Like - Reply - Delete

At 800 to 1500 lbs. I don't think our moose here could be called "donkeys" 😯 . It's about 4 miles from my houe to our small village. There is hardly a day goes by in late Spring and early summer that we don't see at least one moose along the roadway - usually yearlings from last year as the cows are having and tending to the new calves. Just did a quick check on the Dutch owls and the Dorset ones. All see to be well though I find it interesting that Bob the male dorset owl spends the day in the box with Brenda and the babies. Brenda stays real close to the babies as if to protect them. Wonder where the owl box is located as maybe there are no trees around for Bob to spend the day in like McGee did. All these different owl stories and lives are so interesting to watch and learn so much about their lives. Today, 07:44:52 - Flag - Like - Reply

Noticing your posts below with Mary Carrol's spider avatar reminds me of the spiders and web that were often embroidered on crazy quilts in Victorian times. They were often heavily embelished with embroidery, but tons, lace, etc. A spider and web were thought to signify good luck to the quilter. Lynda C IVe been wondering if that might have been one of the reasons Carlos decided to clean some of the "carpet" out of the San Marcos box. There must have been a whole lot of vermin in there, too, plus it must have been a damp, smelly mess. If Molly or another owl decides to use it again it will still have the "used" nest appeal, but they will have a chance to install new, clean (?) bedding. Today, 07:59:45 - Flag - Like - Reply

As far as we know there is no othr owl in the owl box. Threre was some archived footage shown yesterday of Molly when she first moved into the box and laid her first egg (the one that broke). This footage was taken by Carlos before the live stream video was started. So, what we saw yesterday and apparently will be re-broadcast tomorrow is old fottage. Some final thoughts for the night (and there is some speculation here). With the archived video today, appearances by Eric, etc. I wouldn't be surprised if there might be some other "reruns" of favorite segments of the Molly story, etc. There needs to be some incentive to have people stay in the chat rooms in order to maximize sales of the books, Austin's video, cafe press and transferit items, etc. It's called marketing. There isn't a whole worldwide audience out there except those who have participated here. I'm in no way being critical of these marketing efforts at all. Just saying. OK - I'm done for the night.
