Live Barn Owl Nest Box Cam - San Marcos, CA

This is a live feed of a wild female barn owl named Molly. The owl box is located 15 feet off the ground. The male(McGee) has a white chest and face. He usually shows up after dark but has spent an entire day with the female. For more information about the owls and this cam. Click Here Click Here to "Like" us on Facebook.

Elliott Just had a chance to pop back in from a busy morning in the Office. I checked the Starr Ranch nest at around 6:00 this morning. Saw the newest owlet, who I believe was about a half hour old at that point. I got a great shot of it, but frustratingly couldn't post it here for some strange reason.

I'm not sure what the great concern is over the ants this morning. I clearly remember that we fretted terribly over the bugs in Molly's nest, and thought that she and the owlets must be flea-infested, because of their constant scratching. Are ants different? Maybe I missed part of the thread.

Ingrid Good morning, reading so many interesting posts here today. Never knew about blind snakes, nature is amazing for sure. I can't get the Starr Ranch site or the TA one due to not having the right plug-in. Maybe that is a good thing as those ants and bees would not be great to watch from home helplessly. So glad we didn't have to go through things like that in Molly's box.

I hope to have an interesting post later in the day of some photos of the humming bird nest that I am going to cut down from the cord in the garage to show you how small it is. I have waited a few days now to make sure the nest is vacant and will stay that way. Babies have left and no sign that momma is going to use the nest again this year.

Jan (Bayonne, NJ) Ingrid, I just had a thought. Why don't you keep the nest up there instead of cutting it down? There's a real possibility that it will be used again, even if not immediately. Just a suggestion!

Ingrid Oh no, Maybe I should. I wanted to show the size in comparison to a coin. With no birds in it now maybe I can figure out away by getting higher up on the ladder and get a better shot of it than I did when I didn't want to get too close and scare the birds.

pursja After reading thru posts today, I know some of you can relate...yesterday at the wildlife refuge, saw 2 fledglings that probably won't make it. One had one leg dangling but was scrambling to hide in the grasses, the other was just lying in some shade & allowed me up close to take photos - this one was a swift & 100s of swifts flying about there so maybe it was OK. The nests were only 2-3 feet above fast moving water so it had fledged to dry land. But while I got quite upset, nothing to be done except let nature take it's course. Those were the only upsetting parts of my day

Jan (Bayonne, NJ) Our first reaction to these things is totally understandable - we, as humans, are focussed on the individual. Natural selection, on the other hand, is focussed on the species. In the rest of the animal world, to focus on the individual is a danger to the species. Every critter for himself' is the order of the day. Of course, we see nurturing going in with mothers and young, which is essential for the survival of many species. But what we don't see, for example, is the nurturing of a sick or deformed chick at the expense of a healthier owlet. The young most likely to survive is the one that is better nurtured - it makes the most sense in the survival of the species. No 'emotional' decisions going on there!

Mollie Hi, Mary. I tried and tried to get some screenshots for you this morning, but all I ended up with was a black box. There was a sweet sweet interlude when Mama left for a moment and Jamie stretched and leaned her/his face up against the egg beside her/him and then put her/his arms around it. I was screaming in frustration that I couldn't get the shots for you. I guess I'll have to wait for Jamie's namesake to come on to figure out how to get screengrabs from embedded video.

This may be unpopular but I have to say it.....

I think most of us want some souvenir of Molly's family and that's why the books, calendars, etc have been so popular. They are beautiful and fun. But I urge anyone who has enough money for more than one Molly item to think seriously about donating to your local raptor rescue center. A year from now you'll still be enjoying your Molly mug, but if the other items will have found their way to the back of your closet, then a better use for the money would be to an organization who can use it to actually improve the lives of the birds we've come to love. OK - that's it - I'll get off my soapbox. 😊

Please don't feel this is a challenge and everyone needs to post about the good things they've done. I know you are good people who really care about the birds.

Good morning (afternoon) everyone, from a hot city in NJ!
I see that the Starr Ranch owls are now contending with ants. Y'all are probably going to hit me over the head for saying this, but it's about time we all dealt with the reality of what owls and all other creatures have to deal with on a regular basis. Molly, McGee & family live an almost storybook life for wild owls. Watching them hasn't really prepared us for many of negative things that can happen, some of which we've heard about here and some of which we can't even anticipate. We need to see this in order to appreciate what wild creatures have to go through to survive, and to keep us from romanticizing their lives. Far more often than us, they have to struggle for survival.

I agree - it's horrible to watch! That's when I most need to read what I wrote above, to remind me that the owls are not unused to a situation like this and that they are capable of dealing with most situations like this. And, thankfully, that they don't see the situation as we do. Ultimately, it's helpful for us to realize that.

Jan - I agree, as hard as it is to watch and to accept. Early in the Molly experience I was one of the people who often 'interacted' with the worriers and sometimes my comments were misinterpreted. I was not telling them that bad things wouldn't or couldn't happen, only that whatever happened was natural. These are not our pets to be protected and nurtured - these are wild creatures and our only job here is to observe. If we take something away from it, it should be a greater appreciation of nature and it's complexities.

If all of the eggs laid by owls and other birds hatched and thrived, then the world would be overrun with them. They have more than 2 babies and more than 1 clutch a year simply because that's what it takes for their population to remain stable. Watching the ants IS terrible (Peggy - you're right - it's like a horror movie) but the ants are just one of the things that happen to hatchlings. Life is hard. Most wild babies don't survive to become adults.

You are right...I know...I need to just get over it...I'm one of those people that will make a trip to the wild life refuge center with a wounded bird...I'm a little too overly protective...I'm trying to except reality but sometimes it just goes against my nature...It's best that I not watch...

KBorlando (It's ME: Owlosaurus!)
No, Peggy - don't stop watching. Watch everything! Watch the birds around you and the ants too. The more we know and see and appreciate, the better choices we'll make and the richer our world will be. Besides, you're already hooked! LOL. You can't stop now.

I emailed Becky on Saturday to find out if there's a charity that she would like us to make donations to in memory of Merlin. She said probably Kitsap Humane Society, where she got Merlin. Donating online is easy. (And I see that you already did, Mary. Becky will appreciate that.) Here's the website: <http://www.kitsap-humane.org>

I don't want to post Becky's address for acknowledgement (acknowledgement for the UK 😊), but you can find her as Becky J DeSalvo in Port Orchard, WA, or send me a note through the SPOMOD FB site and I'll send you the address.

Ughhhh! TA owls need a fly swatter!
Hi, everyone! Hope you all had a beautiful day today (& will have a beautiful day across the pond). Well it's official...Liam's fully crawling as of today. I will never get a thing done now! His older brothers didn't crawl, one butt scooted but I didn't have to worry about him. They didn't walk til they were 12 months and Liam's only turning 10 months today. Wasn't quite ready for this great but stressful accomplishment. He has so many bumps and bruises and we need to secure all doors/drawers and stairs! I may want to duct tape him to the center of the room by the end of this month...give me strength. He's so proud though. I will have to dust off the mop and vacuum cleaner too. Will not be able to visit you all as often (unless I stock up on the aforementioned duct tape).

I'm lucky to have the 13 and 9 yr old brudders off for the summer. They can use the exercise too! 😊 Crawling is so cute...never watched someone learn it before. The butt scooting was very interesting too...he always had strong tummy muscles from that. This one is destined for "trouble", so it seems!

It was fun to visit with friends you don't see very often. I told them all about Molly and they wished they had known. The parents are from Oregon and are snowbirds. They have a motorhome that they came up here in... it use to be Tim Allen's personal MH. It's plates are BINFRD. Tim was the Tool Time guy. Neat MH. Hope all is well and that Becky is doing ok!

Live Owl Nest Box Cam

AZ, we didn't get a lot of info on the Great Horned Owl. The photos I have shared were taken during a program called the "Birds In Flight Demo." Where the raptors are taught to fly short distance on a lead and they work with them until they can fly a longer distance. This Great Horned owl was new in the program and wouldn't do a darn thing they expected him to. LOL Was funny to watch, all the others were so graceful and this one had a mind of his own. My fiance got some great flight action shots of the Barn Owl but hasn't loaded them to his computer yet. I'll share those as soon as he gets them loaded az, yes the great horneds "who", one late winter/early spring (many years back) we had some great horneds in our trees during mating season. every night, there was lots of "who, whooing" back and forth. it seemed like a very long process...i wasn't aware of what they were doing at the time, but i enjoyed the serenade. later, i realized that it was a courtship thing.

the beginning of father's day for a great horned 😊

from essortment.com:
"In fact, when they are courting, there is a slight difference in the tone of the hoots. The smaller male has the deeper voice, and hoots more frequent during the courtship. And at the start of the courtship, the male keeps a distance of 45 to 60 feet, flying from branch to branch, bowing to the female. If she should be somewhat unresponsive at first, he will bring her a gift of food. With eyes closed, she accepts the gift, and the encouraged male moves closer.

Now begins the posturing. The two owls move slowly towards each other on the branch they are occupying, bowing their heads, bodes in horizontal position, often spreading their wings, all the while engaging in continuous hoots and cries and screeches. Finally, when they are side by side, they will stroke each others feathers gently with their beaks"

As I sit here at 48 degrees F, I'm wondering if summer will really ever come to Central Oregon. The rainiest, coldest, wettest most miserable spring I have had here since I've lived here, and that's been 17 years!! 😞

Can't say I "like", but we all agree up here. Father's Day often sets record heat in Olympia, and today was just cold. Then again, we lived in Phoenix for 5 years, so sometimes it seems like summer NEVER gets here.

brrrr, i remember you mentioning the lack of sun.... hope some official summertime comes your way! we've had an unusually cool spring, as well, yet lots of sunshine. what we have here (western co.) that's tiring is extremely windy conditions: the last couple days had gusts of up to 40 mph...very unnerving! tonight is calm, though, and, now my nerves are, too.

From the website:

IMPORTANT This cam has become more popular than I ever expected and I am so pleased that it has. Among other things the quality of information is excellent - we're all learning. And some recent news, like grade school classes, is great. I hope gets kids more interested in owls, wildlife, and biology in general. However, the increase in visits has escalated beyond what I can afford for the long term. A specific example is the bandwidth (if you're watching, you're using bandwidth) and bandwidth costs $. Specifically, we have been doing well paying a flat rate of $400/month for 2 units of bandwidth. This used to be adequate. But over the last few weeks the bandwidth use has jumped by 10X! This translates into much higher expense and it could easily become several thousand dollars/month to keep the cam going.
Yesterday, 21:15:12 - Flag - Like - Reply

What I can do to lower expense is 1)lower the cam resolution and 2) reduce the timeout back to 5 minutes (remember that if you don't close the page when you walk away, you're wasting bandwidth, i.e. $). I don't want to do either of these. So, please make sure you exit the page when you aren't watching and of course, please consider contributing. Also, if any of you know an individual, foundation, corporation that might be interested in helping out as a sponsor, please let me know. I'm working on finding a sponsor, but could use some help. Thanks. PD

Becky, I logged on earlier today and heard about Merlin. I wanted to post this to you then but I tend to get upset talking about the Rainbow Bridge. My problem came down to it being Father's Day. I hope if you catch up with this post later it will give you a little peace. We have a strange custom in my family, and I won't go into it too much. I just wanted you to know that when Merlin arrived at the Rainbow Bridge, he was greeted by a nice older man wearing cords and a flannel shirt. He was given a few Milk Bones and then introduced around to a rather large group of dogs, of all shapes and sizes. Besides a large number of Siberians, there are German Shorthairs, Weimaraners, a Golden or two and a bunch of Pugs. He will never want for anything and he'll be able to play all day. I know this happens because 30 years ago, this month, my DAD became the official Rainbow Bridge Greeter. Much love, Barb

Hi, owl friends. We didn't have rain or storms as predicted, so we got some chicken and sides and ate on our porch today. My husband and I visited both of our dads, and I took a nap and read on the hammock, on our porch. I just now read some of the posts, and I hope Becky and Connie are doing ok. I really miss just being able to check in night or day, and see our owls. For some reason, just now, I'm really needing to see them. I guess I'll check in on the other ones, but I don't watch very long...it isn't the same! Are there any other little animals or birds that y'owl have been watching? It's hard to say, the city never blew the sirens, so they probably won't be admitting to a tornado, but some of the guys on the fire department mentioned that it seemed too narrow of a path to be straight line winds. It will be interesting to see what our local paper says about it tomorrow. We don't have a Sunday paper, so tomorrow's will have the coverage.

Wasn't that amazing? So much damage from a "regular" storm! We had one like that 4 years ago, but it was winter and it had rained for weeks and then the windstorm came and all the trees came up by the roots because the ground was so soft. I'll attach some photos of that.

Yeah, it was at night and we were all in bed. My daughter had come into our room and the dog was between us shaking. We heard one of the trees fall and hit, but since we didn't hear glass breaking we figured it had missed the house. My husband was planning on leaving on a business trip the next day, but our driveway was blocked by 2 trees 3 feet thick, so he had to cancel the whole meeting at 4 am and try to catch everyone else before they got on planes.

I am going to be using a way of the shrunken PDFs and renaming them all with a consistent format. Then I will be able to bundle them all in a Zip file or similar for backup and archiving purposes. They should all fit on a CD at that point.

He just returned from an around-the-world trip for work so we are looking at pictures of the world. Hope everyone sleeps well. My thoughts and prayers are with the others here who are hurting. Nite all.

Girls are so different than boys. Wow. My girls are full of drama, but at least they communicate. Our son just keeps everything to himself. You never know if there is a problem or if life is great for him. Personally I'd rather have the drama and know where I stand. Just keep the lines of communication open, you'll make it.

My daughter is usually full of drama and thinks that everything is the end of the world, and we hate her, etc. But other times she is almost too controlled. She just broke up with her boyfriend and has told us nothing, nor has she even seemed to mope about it. Last time she told us, but this time she let us figure it out. Didn't take much when their plans to spend his birthday together were replaced by an end of year school party at another person's house. So, we have said we are there if she wants to talk about it but not pushed. I guess that's the best we can do right now.

I bet she will open up to you in a few days. Usually they talk to all their friends, and when they get tired of them or are not hearing what they want THEN and only then do they talk to you. You know you are "better than nothing." I have to say that my relationship with my 19yr old changed so much when she went away to college. Now I get to be one of the first calls. Yay

Here is a recipe to feed woodpeckers, for anyone that might be interested. I cut up the mixture into squares for little basket feeders. They really seem to like it!

Thanks, Colleen. I used to do a similar mixture using melted hard suet and no flour. When it cooled some I added sunflower seeds, poured it into a 9 x 13 pan and refrigerated. When it hardened back up again it would cut into just the right sized blocks for the wire suet feeders. The chickadees like it as well.

All seems to be well at the other web cam sites so I can rest easy tonight. The falcons babies look a lot like Molly's did in the beginning and the mother falcon whose name is Perry is so beautiful (for a falcon that is) The fathers name is Windsong but I haven't see him yet. I will check on all of these critters again tomorrow and most absolutely be checking in here to see my Molly friends. Sleep well and pleasant dreams.

Good for you. I considered taking some photos today and rejoining my long lost daily photo group over on SmugMug. Didn't get far enough past downloading my most recent pics. They were of my niece and nephew playing ball, just too cute not to st and edit them for a while. By the time I was done, I had lost all inspiration to go find something else to shoot out in the heat. Maybe tomorrow...

Sounds great! I'm still "hooked" on the owls too. Brad spend much of yesterday looking up information for me. I want an owl box. We can get Eastern & Western Screech owls here. He plans to put one up by Oct or Nov with a camera so we can see inside 😊 I'll let you know if we put it on the net...prob. just will record videos to share 😊 I heard "I love the rainy night" yesterday and thought of you & saw Wesley bobbing away in my heard 😊

Hey people 😊 Jade & I took Brad to see Karate Kid for Father's Day....it was a great movie. Very sweet, and Jaden Smith is really very talented. Sorry, to hear it's been rough for Connie & Becky. Hopefully, things will start looking up for both very soon. May their hearts heal from their losses soon. You are being prayed for and thought about 😊

Hello again, just had to check in one more time today as it has become a habit. So good to see so many of you feel the same was and hope we keep it up until Molly comes back. (eyes closed and wishing real hard that that will happen)
Sad day for Becky and Connie am hoping each day will get a little easier.
Hope it was a happy day for you James getting another year older is better than the alternative.
Tomorrow I plan on cutting down the humming bird nest and taking some photos of it to share with all of you. so stay tuned for that.

Hi All. I hope everyone had a super, fantastic, fulfilled weekend. I justed wanted to thank everyone for helping me pull it back together after Friday. I've regrouped, replanned, retweeted, revised, and did whatever everything re: I could to make sure the family has a plan from here on out with a sanity clause in it. Thank you again.
I don't know if anyone is watching Starr Ranch but the owner is going to work with the camera tonight (there is a hole in an egg). Its posted on the right side of the screen.

Connie....so sorry to hear about Buddy and your cat. I was hoping he would have come home by now. Sometimes those males can Tom around for a while.
Hope Becky is doing OK. It makes me sad to think of her alone right now.
Colleen.....glad you survived that storm with minor damage.

Hi Mary Pat!!! Did you get my email???

Reading in the basement is so much easier now. LOL I hope I remembered everything I wanted to say. I will be reading more of Mary Pat's book, but will have this screen up so I can check in now & then.

The Molly Wiki has been updated with a new PDF covering the chat from 7am-7pm today.
The http://mollyowl.pbworks.com/sml Original file can be found here:

Amazing what a small change in software can do for your bloated file capturing tendencies. Why didn't I try this one 3 months ago!!!
For anyone curious, I was just introduced to this fine piece of Free software today: PDFCreator http://www.pdfforge.org/
It has many technical features that take some time to figure out (it was written for software folks, by software folks) but it works like a charm. It even appears to capture links just fine, where the other software I was using didn't.
Time to start over from the beginning folks! 😊

No, I just went back to using Firefox for the chat on a laptop and used Chrome for the live streaming video portion on my main computer. Now I just use Firefox for this site, but can use Chrome for all the others. It is something about SPO and the threaded chat it doesn't like.
