K8orlando (It's ME: Owlosaurus!) Kate - he never sees this chat room. We've only been posting links to other owls sites, not personal promotions. Their site is now unmoderated for much of the day. The mods on this site aren't very intrusive but they are there and taking care of us. If a posting is offensive or inappropriate we can always flag it to be removed. They don't have that option over there and rely on their moderators to get rid of posts. Today, 08:58:15 - Flag - Like - Reply

Afternoon!! I think its all to do with the time of the comment - and which part of the comments you 'reply' to - I had a conversation going on like that yesterday which made perfect sense at the time but after reloading my browser it sorted itself into 'times' and made little sense at all! I often have a delay on my posting as well which doesn't help matters - but as far as I know it is automatic. 🙂 Today, 08:07:09 – Flag – Like – Reply Liked by 🛃 Jan (Bayonne, NJ) 🛃 Lynda C 🍘 JH (Pondering PDFing)

Barb Mary, it depends on which comment is being replied to. That is why our conversation comes in the middle--Tyto replied to a comment and you and I had a conversation below that. It is organized the way an outline is I, A, 1., a, ii. etc. but only the first two are indented so it makes it a bit difficult to follow at times. I hope how I have described that makes sense. A face plant is when an owlet goes into a food coma and collapses on the floor, face down. Wesley was famous for his face plants. There is a video named "Wake Up Wesley." That was when Wesley did a face plant and Austin kept poking him in the behind to wake him up. It was hysterical! I believe there's a link to the video somewhere in the Wiki.

K8orlando (It's ME: Owlosaurus!)

The first few times we saw Wessie collapse like that there was a flurry of comments! Everyone thought she was dead! I have to admit the first time was not funny. But we quickly realized that most of the owlets did it after eating a big meal, it was just that drama queen Wes did it more often and much more dramatically. Then we started waiting for it, like we waited for a hork. But there was always someone new on line who would be VERY concerned and ask if the little one was OK. Good night from Arizona to anyone who is left here in the chat. I've been down in the basement reading most of the time I have been on here. Nice to see most everyone returns here. There are some peeps missing in the last few days, but life goes on even if we don't have a view of M&M + Kids any longer. It's not the same since the cameras were shut down, but I for one am glad that there is still chattering going on here. Time to get to sleep. Be back in and out again tomorrow... Sleep well!

Good evening everyone 🙂 Just checking in, also to see if any new news, new archive footage or summer rerun videos from Carlos. Just wondering and not meaning to stir stings up; I'm having trouble reading the latter half of the message in the Blue Box above. I see it says "Chat room rules still apply! This site is not a" I know the moderators were away. Does anyone know what the remainder of the sentence is? I've never seen anyone post anything offensive here except maybe one random time, or the occasional smurf visit. Just wondering what that's about. Thanks.

JH (in Theflesh) The Blue box applies to the other chat room, the one that Carlos controls. I doubt there was ever really anything that bad posted there, it's just always been moderated. Moderated rooms tend to attract people who want to post things they shouldn't. Go figure. I think it's just a challenge to see if they can get something by "the man." Whereas here, it's open and, we haven't really had a problem. Just checking in for a bit, leaving a message here instead of with the thread of the discussion. Please, everyone, do NOT put out dryer lint for nesting material. I know it's been a really popular idea for years, the stuff feels so nice and it looks like it ought to be good for something. Try this - get it wet, as if it had been exposed to rain. Let it dry - and it does not return to its nice fluffy state. It'll be a pretty hard clump.

It's very recent. It was only up for a few seconds and then disappeared. The hole in the far wall indicates that it is at least newer than the last broadcast from inside the box. That rodent could have been leftovers from when CR cleaned out Most of the gag-shag. Or, maybe one of the owls has still been visiting at night to chow down in the box.

This morning I took Jan's advice and didn't cut down the humming bird nest, just in case it might be used again next year. I did get some better close ups of it though as there were no birds to disturb so you can get a better idea of what the nest looks like. For one thing it is really soft sort of like a marshmallow.

The one any only ruby-the never ending variety of various birds nests amaze me. Birds will use readily available material from the area they are in. The one any only rubythroated hummer nest I ever found had lichen almost glued to the outside and was similarly glued to a branch. The inside was lined with the soft, downy remains of the previous year's fireweed blossom. I used to put out a few handfulls of dryer lint in the Spring for the various songbirds birds to use in their nests.

I just checked out the Dutch "little owl" (Steenuil) cam and saw the empty box and was afraid that they had fledged. Then I looked at camera 2, and now see that they are both sitting in the "hallway" of the box, sticking their heads out the door like little dogs! They are SO cute!! http://www.beleefdelente.nl/steenui

BarbBoid Now that you mention it, it does look like he fits right in - he certainly was dealing with the weather better than I was - of course he'd just been fed by his mom and was up looking for her again for MORE, whereas I had no one bringing me fresh pickins and would have to head inside and make my own, after drying off and warming up. Wonder if fleece is as warm as down? Down sure is messier! Douglas dreaming of fresh finch - I can see it in his eye

... They are comical like all raptors when they are sporting all that white down. No cams on the nest because they don't use the same nest each year and you only know which old crow nest they are using at the last minute and then it's too late for someone to climb the 100-ft. tall tree to put up a cam - you'd not only get attacked by the parents (who are pretty fierce), but you might cause the birds to abandon the nest. Sure would be neat if someone could figure out a way to record the goings-on in Merlin nests - someday the technology will be available. I'll bet I'm over the character limit, so I'll post the photo in another message after this.

This is one of the not-so-little Merlin nestlings I photographed yesterday in the 55 degree drizzle here in Seattle - too bad the mist coated my scope lens - I was so tickled that he looked right at me and I caught it! We named 'him' Douglas because he is in a Douglas Fir! The brood hatched a few weeks ago and have another week or so to go until they fledge. The nest is so high up and blocked by fir boughs that it's tough to see much going on there, so we don't know if there are any more than the 2 nestlings we've seen this week (because they are finally big enough to pop up above the nest edge)...
