                         It should be noted that we are not the only strange, non-hunting, non-fishing tweets that HF tweets. They use a #fishynews hashtag that has baseball tweets and other weird stuff that has fish in the headline but not really about real animals.

I read the discussion about the culling of deer with interest. First, I dearly love wildlife of all kinds. However, there are times when deer overrun areas such as the suburbs as the developments spread further and further into the forests which are a deer's natural habitat. They are so cute with their little "bambis" and people want to be helpful and feed them - very often the wrong food. As the size of a deer herd outgrows the available food, they resort to anything they can find - shrubs, flowers, ornamental trees, etc. The often exist on the verge of starvation which can affect their health and the health of their young (if they are are known carriers of deer ticks (as are some other animals) which cause Lyme disease. Deer are also hosts of brain worm which can affect other hooved animals and it is a horrific experience to watch an animal die of it. Most cities, suburbs, small coastal islands who need to control the deer herd population usually do and should have a plan in place that has been prepared by knowledgeable wildlife officials, biologists, etc. Believe me, I don't LIKE the fact

Lynda C
Of course, they are cute and often become quite tame and people friendly - but they are meant to be wild. A suggestion to move them to specific areas would only compound the problems and unless they are fenced in -where they would no longer be wild - they will wander again in search of food. Deer

They had that problem on Angel Island (San Francisco Bay) and resorted to birth control, which, I think, was the best solution. Today, 18:01:09 - Flag - Like - Reply Barb Lynda, I agree there are unpleasant choices to be made. Did you delete an earlier version of this? I thought you had posted it below. In our area you have to be a certified sharp shooter in order to participate in a culling program. They are VERY controlled. $I \ hope \ that \ those \ states \ that \ have \ made \ it \ illegal \ to \ donate \ venison \ to \ food \ banks \ will \ rethink \ those \ rules.$ Today, 18:03:42 - Flag - Like - Reply

They have had to do some deer culling on a couple of Maine islands in recent years (deer can and do swim to these islands - sometimes a mile from shore). Both were done in the Fall. They were well-planned and carried out . In one cae it was down by a hired sharp-shooter and all meat was donated. Can be some problems with donating to food banks as government regulations require USDA inspection; but they can donate directly to needy families. In another there was a 3-day, by-permit Fall hunt which came during the November hunting season. I'm not sure how birth control works in

Part of the problem is that we have county parks that border the local National Park. In the NP they don't do any deer culling so whenever one of the metroparks on the border culls there are ALWAYS accusations of luring deer out of the NP, etc. They usually put feed in one of the open fields and shoot from platforms (a missed shot will hit the ground and not go wild). There are really too many of them and when they cull in one park the over crowded deer from the adjoining park move in. The Emerald Necklace is a beautiful thing until you are trying to control some animal, be it the deer or the ash

Barb

Lynda, the birth control program here was/is a pilot program. I have not kept up with it. I think they trapped the deer and used an injection. All of those deer had large ear tags which could be plainly seen and those individual does were watched.

I hear what you are saying, Colleen. I totally understand why you feel the way you do and I don't expect you to agree with my rationale I really don't know much about artificial birth control for deer. But, feeding deer grain or specialy made deer pellet food only makes them that much more dependant on humans and, in effect, tames them. Besides food, large populations of deer in populated areas lack the bedding and cover they need during the Methods such as birth control for deer are extremely expensive, not really effective, and also carry unknown risks/side effects that may in turn end up being far worse than the alternative. Those who are against hunting need to accept the fact that hunting is not just a sport or leisure activity, but it is also a known and effective way to help control the population.

       Have you ever suffered a lifelong debilitating condition brought on by an incorrect dosage of some synthetic drug? Not saying that is what I was talking about, because it isn't, but it could apply also.
       What I was talking about is the unknown effects of that synthetic substance (in feed) being consumed by animals other than the intended targets. No matter how many times man thinks he has the answers to natures problems, we always manage to foul up some important detail and end up in worse shape than before. The world is full of examples. Whereas hunting is something we've been doing since the beginning of time. We know what happens and it is effective. It also benefits more people with something tangible than only those manufacturing birth control for ruminants.

Unfortunately, that fact that hunting is a "sport and leisure activity" means large groups of the American public want to partake in it. State management officials take this into great consideration. Since hunting liscences are a major contributor to the budget of these management agencies, and the fact that they are a political body subject to political pressure from the public masses who cherish hunting, they employ management strategies to keep a deer herd reproducing as much as possible.
       If you drive around the rural areas of Northern Michigan and look at the White Cedar stands scattered across the state, you will notice that nearly all of them are picked clean of anything green and edible below the 6 foot mark, which means virtually zero regeneration of young cedars, (the most important winter deer food).

I live in an area of PA. that instituted a deer culling 2 years ago. Although the deer population had risen, and because many were the victims of car accidents; the main reason that they gave for this project was the damage to the farms. While I would not let hunters on our property during hunting season, for many reasons, there were not enough taken during both bow and rifle season. I was one of the group of people, which included vets, that were in favor of "deer birth control" We did not win the argument and they actually had retired special forces teams with night vision equipment to do the culling, when no residents would be out and around. The only problem I had was when I found out that all the farmers that complained about the deer, were already being compensated by the county for deer losses, with my taxpayer money.

                           At least it was time well spent. I spent about the same amount of time getting up to speed on Laura Bell Bundy. The music is not really my type anymore but, her career and outlook is pretty intriguing. Several interviews with her and her family on YT. Seems to be a female version of early Garth Brooks, or at least in the same spirit. Could be interesting to watch her "country music" career develop over the next few years. I do like the tinge of Blues I hear in some of her music, just not the glossy over-production that all pop stuff seems to have in today's market.

                           Yeah, after a while, all the videos start to look alike. I doesn't do anything for me. My brother has a heavy-metal-type rock band called Monster Magnet. Not so big here in the states, but extremely popular in Europe. I love his stage act (even though I have to wear earplugs.) But his videos all look alike to me after a while.

I thought about a couple of calendars for Christmas gifts, nice prints on them, but they are pretty pricey - especially for a 2010 calander. I would

                     Elliott, as for hummers in winter climates, I don't believe they stay around in the winter, except in places that have warm winters, like AZ, etc. In MA, they leave in late Aug/early Sept, and don't return until June. Today, 13:29:38 - \underline{\text{Flaq}} - \underline{\text{Like}} - \underline{\text{Reply}}

I'd love it if we had Hummers in the UK! I've only ever seen one and that was in French Guiana - I've been to various parts of the States - particularly California and I can't believe I never saw one there!

                            You probably know this, Elliott, but the only hummer we have in the east is the Ruby Throated, I'm so envious of people in the west, having many varieties! Still, the Ruby Throated is a lovely little bird--and they are aggressive!

When I walked the dog a while ago I saw my first hummingbird of the season! 😇 No camera at the ready either, and besides they are too quick for that. I need to get the feeder filled. It has seemed too cold to do that before this. But I rarely see them here because of all the tress and the fact that the windows and trees aren't located properly. When we lived in AZ we had a tree just outside our kitchen window where we sat to eat and so saw them everyday. 😃

           Buy a window feeder. Either get one that attaches to the glass with suction cups or one that hangs from a small bracket mounted above the window.
           Then the photo ops just keep coming. If you have Low-E or tinted glass, the reflection from the glass will all but hide your presence on the other side of the window. Makes shooting photos of them in flight very easy. Flash is still recommended if you have any hope of capturing their wings with any sort of definition. Getting them completely frozen in a photo requires extremely fast shutter speeds, so don't expect that without some serious lighting/camera gear.

Just came in from watering the weary and wilting all-volunteer garden. It's really HOT and Humid here, has been for over week. Even the deer are moving very little. So little, in fact, that I hadn't realized that they were all bedded down only feet from me while I waved the magic water wand around the thirsty roots in the compost heap. Low and behold, I saw my first spots of the season. \stackrel{f \cup}{}

           The first of several fawns got up, from its hiding spot in the shade, only about 15 feet away and took a good long look at me before bouncing off. That in turn set off a small flurry of activity from several others, fawns and adult alike. I counted 12 in all. They moved in single file off the bluff and into the little valley which connects my vard with the neighbors. No camera in hand this time but, it did remind me of this great series of photographs from last year. It's a collection of images of a doe giving birth to fawns, in public, at a collage campus, just before dusk one evening last May.

           Hello, James-son. Good to see you, and everyone else. And those are beautiful photos of the doe and fawn, really moving. I love it that you have all those deer around you, too--poor things, don't you feel bad for them when it gets so hot.
          I don't know if you saw my photos of the turkeys roosting next to the house the other night, but here they are again, in case you didn't. I didn't have much light, so they're not absolutely sharp photos. What amazed me was how high up they were--about 80 feet, I'd say--and that the little ones could fly that high. Once they settled in, I could see that one of the hens had both wings spread to cover some of the babies. It isn't that it's unusual to see turkeys \ around \ here, \ but \ I've \ never \ been \ able \ to \ really \ observe \ them \ closely \ before, \ so \ it's \ been \ a \ treat.

          I did see those and it is a special treat. Enjoy them while you can!
           Funny story - I had just hit a a wild turkey with my little Honda Prelude (not the funny part) when traveling to have dinner with some friends. The silly (and startling) bird flew up from a field beside the road and didn't have enough clearance to miss intercepting me as I sped by. I arrived at my destination to walk in on a mother telling her son, in very explicit terms, "Turkeys can't Fly!" Seems the son had mentioned seeing some in a nearby tree just recently. I laughed and proclaimed that I had a fresh wound, complete with a few breast feathers still intact on the top of my windshield, which would prove otherwise. \stackrel{ullet}{\cup}

note from person who thinks too much:
i know you all do not know me from adam, except, of course, from adam curry, here 🙂, but i do want to clarify that i'm not the meannest mom on the block.
bribery and threats do not play a role in my parenting philosophy or reality at all!! when i gave my son the ultimatum, "vegies or never going anywhere again."
he first said, "did you hear what you said??," then we both kind of laughed. so, to squelch any future rumors, or to start a new one, i needed to tell you all this important news. please ignore if you don't know what i'm talking about, and if you do know, maybe ignore, anyway. 🥌

          ROFL!! I think we've all been there!!!! I just hate it now mine are a bit older and wiser. When they were naughty I used to do the 'count to 3' thing, thankfully I never ever got to 3 - and i'm not sure what I would have done if I had - likewise I'm not sure quite what they thought I was going to do either
           - maybe spontaneously combust or something!!! ..... and apparently, so they tell me now, when I get cross my chin juts out which is when they knew they were in trouble - now they just laugh and say 'look out its the chin' ... as the older two are both around 6 foot tall now I stand no chance LOL!!

Marley, my avatar kitty, is a retired blood donor cat. At a nearby veterinary school, they have a permanent colony of blood donor cats - industrial sized, as you might imagine. Cats need transfusions, too. After about 3 years in the colony, they adopt them out. He was named when we adopted him. He had been fostered with a friend of mine on her farm with a bunch of other kitties. He's happy to be an indoor cat now and thoroughly spoiled. JH (Post Pondering) Thanks guys, but it's really not a major task anymore. It was at its absolute worse on those really active nights, between 6 and 9 pm PDT, when we could easily generate several hundred posts in very short order. That was like fighting your way through a crowded train station with hundreds of loud & obnoxious tourists in the way. Now it's like a leisurely stroll through a sparsely populated park, picking up tidbits of conversation from some pretty interesting folks. I'll continue to look at it over the next several days and, if the volume of activity warrants a once daily copy, then I'll switch to that. At times we were compiling one every couple hours, just to stay on top of all the activity. Twice a day is not a problem. If the chat subsides much more, then once a day will probably work. I don't that's it at all. A few days ago, when they were planning on leaving, he said the moderators were now "off duty" on the other site. He said that children log on and asked everyone to still observe the rules of decency. That's all. Today, 08:29:02 - Flag - Like - Reply Jan (Bayonne, NJ) He's referring to the other chat room - the one he set up. Not this chat room! I think the posting of URLs is forbidden all over the other site and not just in Carlos' chatroom. When they had spammers show up there in unmoderated the social stream they would post the same link over and over again at regular intervals to get people to click. Its more for the other chat room than us - on the odd occassion that I looked on there they used to get repeat advertising posts with a link to someones website - when I say repeat - it was coming up every minute or so - very annoying! Hi Jan!!

Carlos is referring to his own chat room, not this one. There were people posting links to all sorts of stuff, especially in the unmoderated Social Stream.

K8orlando (It's ME: Owlosaurus!)
Kate - he never sees this chat room. We've only been posting links to other owls sites, not personal promotions. Their site is now unmoderated for much of the day. The mods on this site aren't very intrusive but they are there and taking care of us. If a posting is offensive or inappropriate we can always Thanks everyone. I don't post links or visit any that are posted. Just noticed that there are a lot posted here and wondered if that's what his comments pertained to.

Links to religious and political junk, totally unrelated and just plain annoying.

Noticed Carlos' posting a few minutes ago with his new cameras and reconstruction.....could this mean - no - I can't go there and get my hopes up.

flag it to be removed. They don't have that option over there and rely on their moderators to get rid of posts.

I think it does mean he is up to doing it again!!! He would not dare posting something like that , knowing we are here here "listening" to every word he writes!!!

The only question is whether he will share with us or just enjoy it in his home.

Telling and not sharing would be mean. Carlos isn't mean. And look at how much money he's raised for the wildlife foundation there!

If he were just doing it for himself, I doubt he would announce that fact to the world of Molly fans!

That may be true Jan, I wonder if he will use a modified schedule--no broadcasts during certain hours. His big complaint was the 24/7 with 10 hours a day of minding the computers. I'd be tempted to schedule days off.
