Live Barn Owl Nest Box Cam - San Marcos, CA

This is a live feed of a wild female barn owl named Molly. The owl box is located 15 feet off the ground. The male(McGee) has a white chest and face. He usually shows up after dark but has spent an entire day with the female. For more information about the owls and this cam. Click Here Click Here to "Like" us on Facebook.

Colleen I like this guys art, and he is having a contest. How many photos do you think an artist would take on a three week painting trip to England?

I have a chance to see the ISS at 9:44 pm and 11 something. I don't think it will be dark enough for the first one and I'll see if I'll be up for the second one. OK, gotta go again. Just busy tonight!

I actually crochet and knit mostly (I like things to move along a bit faster)...but, you're right they do have some really pretty patterns. They make great gifts too! I make about 1/2 of my Christmas gifts each year.

treehouse in WA Well, a friend and I do the annual master gardeners garden tour, which is Saturday. I tried to edge out of it but she was looking forward to it so...

Hope a get together happens again but then I'll be even further behind. I'm not very familiar with chat rooms but I've decided that all of you are really good multi-taskers and that you're probably writing novels while writing on-line.

Kathleen, just was looking for your new youtube video but couldn't find it. Did watch your newest dialysis video. Wow! You do have a great attitude! My Mother-in-law had to have 2 dialysis treatments after an angioplasty because the contrast dye shut down her kidneys. They started up again after the two treatments so she didn't have to have more. Anyway, I sat with her for part of the one time and my husband did the other, so we saw much of the procedure. - Added a last sentence also in case that helps.

Very appropriate I think. I have nothing against them either. I guess it's their choice and as long as they can take care of them properly, more power to them. http://spaceflight.nasa.gov/realdatasightings/cites/skywatch.cgi?country=United+States
Select state. Select closest city and a list of dates, times, degrees, direction, max altitude and duration should show up. We always select a high elevation, long duration (4 mins?) and try to remember to run outside a minute before the said arrival time and watch in the direction from which it comes, e.g. NNE. About 40 will appear. Here's a good one for Seattle:

Apparently, I'm here to defend the Duggars tonight. That huge beautiful home they have....THEY BUILT IT THEMSELVES over three years (and lived in a four bedroom 2 bath house while doing it). I know that they seem a bit strange to most people...but, honestly, they are good people who take care of their kids, and pay their own way (no welfare)...their two oldest sons have started their own businesses in the past couple of years. One has a car dealership and one started a towing business (his dad taught him how since he did that job when he was young.) Caps aren't yelling...just trying to make a point.

I know the feeling, Marie. My entire childhood was spent vacuuming, dusting, doing laundry and hauling children around with me wherever I need to go. It wasn't all bad, but as I got older I couldn't help thinking, If my younger brothers and sisters could have a childhood, why couldn't I? I feel I missed out on something that should be every child's right.
Whew! I guess I needed to get that out!

 Personally, I'd probably be put in a rubber room if I had all their kids...but, they do seem to handle it well and be happy. Jade started watching their show when it was only 14 kids...so, I've seen a fair bit of them. They are sweet Christian people who are happily married and have a LOT of kids. 😊

 I come from a family of 8, Rhonda, and I'll tell you that when there are a lot of children in the family, something's gotta give - and that usually means quality time alone with a parent, something each individual child needs. Obviously not all large families are ideal but neither are plenty of small ones.

 Please be careful about assuming that everyone feels and reacts the same way you do to children.

I have a cousin with 10 children, 6 of whom are AIDS orphans adopted from Ethiopia. They do very well together as a family, my cousin is an elementary school principal and has always wanted a large family. Obviously not all large families are ideal but neither are plenty of small ones.

 I agree with you Barb, and I was just stating my opinion. As I said, some children can handle it and some can't. And of course I do have my own axe to grind - no secret there! But I've seen it happen in too many large families and it makes me sad.

 You all have very valid points. It was apparently their choice and as long as the children are fed properly, have some discipline, are given good values, learn responsibility and are given the most important thing, LOVE it's all that really counts. I know there are teachers and child care givers here who have seen one and two child families that are very dysfunctional and the parents take little responsibility for their kids. I grew up in a family of 5 children, had an alcoholic father who often was out of a job, whose parents often argued (never abusive) and hand-me-downs was the norm. But, somehow we all learned to take responsibility for our own actions, to appreciate what we had and that there was no "free ride" - we learned that we had to work for everything we had

 Well, you know I am going to have a story ... I went to the SSW - my back yard. Moon was in the front yard. Being pitch black outside, I tripped to the front. Big bright moon - now you must understand. We are close to Dulles Airport. We got lights flying in the sky all over the place, so I look near the moon. I locate it!!! I think I saw it. I am thrilled! Of course, since I was in the front yard at least 50 cars drove by and wanted to know why I was staring at the sky with my mouth wide open. Oh well - I saw it. I think. 😊

 There are so many variables to contend with here, Owlo. We've had air quality alerts for the past 3 days - ozone - and that always does funky things to the atmosphere. Also, I live right across from Newark Bay, and there are many container-loading towers there. They have these huge lights all over the place and when a container ship comes into port, they light up the entire western sky. On cloudy nights, the reflected light brightens the entire sky. Hard to see many stars here on any night. Guess I should feel lucky to be able to see the moon! LOL

Just a friendly reminder to those on the east coast with clear skies tonight. The ISS is due to pass overhead in approx. 20 minutes. Be looking to the south-east for a "fast moving star." From my vantage point it will pass not far above the moon, which means all photos are out of the question for me and I may not even be able to see it this time around.

Hey thanks Mary Pat! I just went and checked. In 11 minutes I am dashing to the SSW part of my yard. I went to that site you mentioned, put in my zip and voila. Wow. I may need to write my team if I actually see the thing. See, they don't trust me to teach science. Apparently, it's not good for the children. However, I don't trust them to teach history. They don't know beans about history! But this year, I am taking over the owl unit! Right before we dissect pellets, my co-teacher teaches owls. I was thinking today that I am taking that over and he will be teaching the fascinating Appalachian Plateau region of VA.

EVERYONE, Thank you for all you kind words about my dance video. One of my dreams has been to have a little neighborhood studio in the garage to host sort of dancezize events. Nothing to structured, just bumping, pumping music that we could work out to and be silly together. Maybe set up a little area for people who want to do their own video to country western, Gaga, Janet or Michael Jackson, Jimmy Buffet, whatever.

We've had 3 days now of warm weather. I think I've turned the furnace off for the summer....the latest date I can ever remember. Lady Kathleen

Good evening. I hate to tell all you sweltering folks what a nice day it turned out to be here. Started out with some drizzle (go the gadens got a drink)and humid, but cleared by noon with bright sunshine, a moderate breeze, much drier air and temps around 70. A brief shower went through a sort time ago, but clear again and a comfortable 60 degrees. Looks like you had a PARTY this afternoon and you even had to sit and wait until the bubble wrap was neatly folded 😊!!! What a haul you got Kristi.  A former neighbor of mine made dentures as a profession. He would agree completely, only I believe he said it at 40. He joked that it was much easier to make a full set look beautiful than it ever was to try and match the wonders of mother nature plus 40 years of abuse.

Kristi from VA I did some of the notecards, too. They are large. They have tons of room inside in which to write. There is just the tiny Cafe Press logo on the back. The pictures came out okay - there was a little bit of white (where it should not have been) on some of the cards. I am forever writing letters or thank you notes. I am also a Chemo Angel. It's an organization in which you are assigned a patient undergoing chemo and you send the person letters. I am always at Hallmark buying cards, so I thought it would be nice to have owl cards, too. It would give me something to write to the patient, too. So they were expensive, but they are large. Today, 16:14:35 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by pursja Kathryn R

Some interesting comments on the Dutch Eagle-Owl cam about the owl's poepflatsen. Well, honestly I'm not sure what it's saying about it other than the color was off, but I just don't get much opportunity to use a word like poepflatsen so I didn't want to pass up the chance. This site is so educational!

Well, it's sweltering here in New York City: 93 and 80% humidity. If the New York crowd wants to have a picnic in Central Park in the middle of August, they can go ahead without me. I'll be sitting in an air-conditioned room somewhere with the lights out, with the slightest of clothing on, if at all.

I didn't see your question but I know that Yorkies are notorious for being difficult to house train. Bella and Lakota are 7 and I got them a month apart, Rigby is 1 1/2 and Contessa is 9 mos so I had time to work with them and crate them when I am gone for they love and terrorize each other.

I has a not-too-bright finch make a nest in the spruce tops we put out over the winter in our window boxes. My neighbors thought I was awful for leaving the spruce tops out well into late May. But I couldn't touch them because of the nest! Poor thing, she was clearly a first time Mom, because this was an AWFUL place to build a nest, and none of the eggs hatched - but it was fun while it lasted!

oh shame! poor little thing - still practice makes perfect. We have a pergola next to our garage with an evergreen honeysuckle growing over it and last year a blackbird built a nest right inside it - I was quite surprised as its where we put the bird feeders so its a really busy little spot - as it happened she abandoned it before laying eggs - but im fairly sure a little mouse has been using it this year instead - I've caught it scurrying up the wall towards it a couple of times!

What's on my mind? Months of postponed housekeeping and really scary refrigerators, that's what!

Last night we decided to do one of those fridge cleanings where you take everything out and clean the shelves, then only put back the things you think you might actually eat. It was necessary because too many bits of leftovers have been shoved in there since I became owl-obsessed. I hate to admit it, but yes there was something nasty lurking that was noticeable every time we opened the door. I'm sure you won't be surprised to hear that I found things with expiration dates of Feb 2010. Mmmm... I wonder what happened along about Feb/Mar that may have caused me to start ignoring basic cleaning chores???

:lol :lol I'm a little luckier than you. We didn't get home from FL until early May, so I had a very clean and empty refrigerator to start with !! That's not to say I probably don't have some things now hidden in the back that are growing "penicillan". I did throw out almost a whole half gallon of milk on Monday that expired on June 16th (we're not milk drinkers). But there are plenty of dust bunnies that have grown into polar bears lurking around and pile of "stuff" needs to be put away or disposed of. All in good time :D

Thanks to some prodding from Bill and cj in fl, I was just playing with the sky calculators over at http://www.heavens-above.com and realized that I may be able to see the ISS tonight at around 9:40 pm local time, at least from my upstairs bedroom window. I have an alarm set and will report back if I am able to witness. I may set up the camera and try for a timed exposure to catch a streak. The big problem I have is tall pine trees, my little hole in the woods severely limits my view unless something is high enough in the sky to see it. I think 40 degrees altitude ought to put it above the treetops, at least momentarily.

Those of you in FL and all along the east coast should have a nice view, provided clouds don't obscure.

"We" did. John Isner beat French Nicolas Mahut in a match that had 980 points. Just their fifth set went longer than the longest match ever before, and had more points in it! It took them three days to finish. Neither of them could break the other's serve. And the craziest part of all is that Isner was seeded somewhere in the 20s and Mahut was something like 119! The guys on NPR this morning said they were both gentlemen throughout the entire match and even applauded each other on good shots. How I would have loved to be there!

Elliott, thanks for the link to the Benchley essays. That is a wonderful new find for me, and one I am sure to enjoy. I also read the part on How to Understand Music. I had many of the exact same thoughts/comments about literature while in school. Never once was I satisfied that an "expert" could know what an author was thinking while writing. Same holds true for all artistic expression. My favorite passage was the end of that piece (attached below).

Oddly enough, one of my first thoughts upon seeing funny Google translations of some of your French Haiku was the book 'Me Talk Pretty One Day' from a favorite satirist. David's dysfunctional family lived not far from me, in Raleigh, and he has a huge following around here. His audio books make great travel companions.

Report those ladies to the Pope! That's terrible! So you got your books at the public library and out of your parents' bookcase, I guess. It's a lovely little book, about some children who wonder why the storks deserted their village and set about trying to bring them back. The entire village gets involved and they all learn a lot of life lessons (this being a book for children). It's still in print and still in the children's section of public libraries.

My parents' bookcases alone kept me very busy for years, Molly! Our public library was teeny in the '50s and early '60s, but I was so wrapped-up in Constatin's historical novels of England and Kenneth Robert's Revolutionary War novels that I didn't care! Roberts did excellent research for his novels, which of course I didn't really know the first time I read them.

"The Wheel on the School" sounds like the kind of book I would have devoured as a child! I will read it now, but I'm sorry that I didn't get a chance to read it at a time when the world was new for me!

They were REALLY GOOD. I will go back and eat them again. When I got home, I looked up the recipe on the internet. I think the filling at the restaurant was more like the Canadian meat pies than the Australian pies recipes on the internet because I tasted sage in the filling. I really liked the pies.

Sounds like the French meat pies (Tortiere) that we have here, Mary. Maine has several communities with a large French Canadian population - most families who settled here to work in the big shoe mills and paper mills tht used to be in Maine's and about 1900's and early 1900's. They brought with them their culture, traditions, festivals and some wonderful recipes. Tortiere is a two-crust) meat pie made with ground pork and beef (sometimes only pork), mashed potato, onion and seasonings, including sage or savory. They also used to use the same filling in a turnover or meat pastie that the workers could take to their dinner pails. I have no French heritage, but have friends that are and one always gives me a Tortiere, made from an old family recipe, over the Christmas holidays

Probably not, Jan. But there are lots of recipes out there for "Tortiere" and meat pies. Many are similar, but with slight variations. I don't know why, I have never made one. I always wait for that "special" one over the holidays.

Good morning, this is my normal morning check in to see if there is anything new to see or talk about. No new blog from Carlos yet but the latest one was great. We are all hoping that eventually Moly and McGee will come back and start a new family that we can watch grow again. It probably won't happen again until early next year but I will always check and be on here until it happens again.
Seems I am reading about so many storms in the country, hope you all stay safe. Could use some rain here in California but that is not likely to happen for many months. Heat isn't too bad yet but know it is on the way.
Have a great day everyone and I will be checking back in again tonight.

Good morning all. Dreary, warm and humid with a few light rain showers here in Maine today. That's OK as I have lots of inside projects that I intended to do in early May. I wonder why I never got to them ☹️. Not much activity here in the chat room last night - looks like only one or two people at times. Will check in from time to time today, so take plenty of screen shots of the babies at Star Ranch, Cornwall (UK), Dorset Wildlife Trust, the Dutch owlets and the ones in TA.

First thing when I came to work I went to the owl box and put my head phones on. When there was a noise I could switch back and see what was going on. I still have the head phones on but the owls are not there anymore and it is like I am unable to work or I do not know what to do with my day even so I have a lot of work. Elliott, it is right on the lake front in-between the football stadium and the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame. The Steamship Mather used to be East of there, nearer Burke Airport, as it's own museum and was moved and became part of GLSC a few years ago.
Have you ever visited the USS Cod Submarine? It's not open in the winter but it's right next door to Burke. Very easy to see the Cod and then walk next door and see the free exhibits of women in aviation in the airport. There is a wreath ceremony at the Cod on Dec 7 every year but that is the only winter event. The Cod is unique in that it is actually usable. They fire up the engines a couple times a year. It is not modified for anyone w/a handicap--we had a time of it when we first visited and I had a baby along. Not easy to carry her and use those ladders at the same time, also not easy to hand her down to someone.

No, I haven't visited the submarine. My problem is that most of my trips to Cleveland are in the morning and out in the evening. And even if I stay overnight, I'm always working a full day, and have dinner with colleagues in the evening. I'm virtually never there on a weekend. So I usually see the Office and Hopkins and the inside of a taxi in between!

Hmm, perhaps you should ask your colleagues to pack a sack lunch for once and go see the Cod. Could easily be done in an hour unless you are like my dad and have to stop and read and learn about every single thing. I won't tell you about when we went as a family way back when to see the King Tut Treasures! My mother and brother waited over an hour after they were finished looking at the exhibit for my dad and I to finish getting through there and my dad thought he was rushed!

I've kicked myself since for not spending part of my week over at Kennedy. I would have enjoyed that so much more than the manufactured world of make believe. It's been 30 years since I was in KSC.

I don't think I have been to KSC in about as many years as you. Would LOVE it if they could get a bit rocket to display here.
My understanding is that the new Visitor's Center will be bigger and have more exhibits than the old one. With all the new security issues with NASA and the Airport next door I think the new center will also be much easier for people to visit. It's amazing that the GLSC has already passed the number of visitors that NASA would get in a year at the Glenn site.

Cute! My daughter got a mostly-Bengal last year, and he is the sweetest thing. Crazy, like bengals, but curious, smart and loving (when he wants to be!) He likes to get in the shower with her and he goes into her drawers an closet to find all his favorite toys. He's super friendly to other cats and loves to play with any visitors, animal or human...even if they don't want to play with him. When she visits me, my old tabby just glares at him when he tries to play with her. When he was little she would hiss at him, like he was an alien monster!

Hello everyone,
Gosh, that was fun! We went to an Australian Pub and Barbie for supper. They serve Australian meat pies and I wanted to try one. I love Canadian meat pies and figured I'd probably like the Australian version. True!
But the fun part was when I noticed the staff setting up poker tables. It seems the patrons play poker on Wednesday night. Anyone may join in...so I did until I lost all my free chips. I had not played poker since I was in my 20's. It was fun!

I had my garbage trailer loaded up to go to the dump... loaded it up a couple of days ago... I got home today and I think I have a bear around here. About 10 bags were hauled down the revene and it took me like 1 1/2 hours to clean it up. I am sleeping with my window open tonight to see if I can hear it. Kind of spooky!

My daughter always wants the last word and if we have a disagreement she starts crying and making it into a thing like it is the end of the world. She has always been strong willed, but now it turns into this huge thing where she thinks she can't do anything right when all I wanted was for her not to talk back. It is very much a battle of the wills with hormones, but she insists that is not it. Both my husband and I see it but she doesn't. Sigh. She still gave me a hug good night, so I guess we survived another one.

Our neighbors found a baby to robin in their drive today still alive. Very young, hardly had any feathers. We hated to just leave it as the mom and dad kept flying around but didn't want to disturb it much either. We got a bucket, put some pine needles in it for bedding and hung it on a branch in the tree. We didn't want to touch the baby so my Finace tipped the bucket over on it's side and used a piece of cardboard to help scoot it in. Not sure if it will make it but we at least wanted to give it a shot.

the rehabilitators usually care for them at their own homes, sometimes they will come and pick up the birds/animals, sometimes you have to take them to their house. I enjoy going, it is so fascinating. There are birds, owls, turkeys, squirrels, inside the shed, outside, in her house, everywhere. If you get a chance, it's fun and very interesting.

It probably won't hurt a thing if you pick up the baby put it back in the nest (if you can easily reach the nest). The mother isn't very apt to abandon it just because it was touched by a human. here have been several posts here in recent weeks of people finding a baby bird or a whole nest that has fallen to the ground and picked the bird or nest up and put it back. But, check with a wildlife person if you can't. One problem with a baby bird that small is that it needs the mother's warmth and frequent feeding in order to survive.

Just checked in on the Dorset (UK) Wildlife Trust - Bob & Brenda. All is well. But, funny reading the chat. They call them "boblets" and are talking about possible names - Max for the maxi one, Mike for the micro one and Mini for the mini one 😊. They are also having some of the same discussions we had about barn owls - "do they have crops", "how can they breathe while swallowing a whole rodent", "they're not growing much" or "they are getting bigger every day", etc.. Hard to follow the chat there as answers appear anywhere in the chat stream and not below a post as it is here.

Ok, I lied I am still up. Just one more quick thing before I really go to bed. I saw Kathryn R's post down below about hives. We got a new puppy with short hair and she breaks me out in terrible hives! I never had this happen before from an animal just things I have ate. Any new furry family members? OK, I am really off to bed now, its almost midnight here.

Michelle, you didn't say what breed of puppy you have; so I can't be sure what might be causing the hives. Off the top of my head, short-haired dogs don't have a thick enough coat to hold in the dander from their skin. You could be allergic to his/her dander, or if you just got the dog, there is a chance that the breeder/rescue might have used a flea powder that your sensitive too. Let me know what breed and I would recommend you give the dog a good bath.
I just remembered my husband will break out in a type of hive if the dog licks him on the inside of his arms or his neck. He just doesn't let them do that anymore.

I saw all the discussions about ice cream below and it made me wonder if anyone else is a Dippin Dots fan? Do you have them in other areas or is it just a tourist town thing? I simply can't walk past one of their stands without stopping. Chocolate mint or banana split... always a hard decision!

Joan, thanks for the memory jogger about Madison Wisconsin! Living there in the 1970s was a trip - in more ways than I can remember. Seriously, there's a lot I don't remember, but I'm pretty sure I loved it.

'71 - we missed that, moving there in '76, but we heard about it and every year attended the Mifflin Street Block Party in memory of the tear gassing. Every Saturday there was an excellent farmers market around the capitol building and we would take our meager earnings and stock up for the week. I always saved a couple dollars so I could buy melons from the Melon Men. mmmmm... there's a fun memory!

why do you keep getting those hives???? can air borne allergies cause hives, rather than something you eat? My husband got hives when he was on some medication that had sulfa in it. Are you on any meds???

No, I'm not on any meds except I started taking Benadryl at night to relieve the itching. It's got me befuddled, but allergies are so hard to pin down I don't want to spend a ton of my HRA account to find out they don't know what the cause is. I've researched a lot on chronic hives on the internet, and basically it's an allergy to something... and in most cases they can't figure it out and you just relieve the symptoms. Sigh.

I can relate....try oatmeal in your bath...seriously make a "bag" of it in a washcloth and secure with a rubber band. It is extremely soothing to the skin and very gently. Also, Aveeno lotion is good too (they make a powered oatmeal to put directly in your bath water. 😊

Yes, Rhonda! I agree. They do have an oatmeal bath. I have bought that for my son that has eczema.

They do both have soothing properties. It won't "cure" the hives, but it helps relieve the discomfort. I also found a pure aloe gel very soothing when I had a "beasty" bout of shingles.

The smurfs are good comedy improv here anymore. Everybody knows each other here so those smurfmuffins need come a bit more prepared. I love reading how our SPO-MOD busters give'em the old what to, what for. You guys are awesome. I was cracking up. Some of the quotes I swear we need to put on t-shirts or something. Well, if anything you put a smile on my face. Love you guys/gals!!
