KBorlando (It's ME: Owlosaurus!) I saw all the discussions about ice cream below and it made me wonder if anyone else is a Dippin Dots fan? Do you have them in other areas or is it just a tourist town thing? I simply can't walk past one of their stands without stopping. Chocolate mint or banana split... always a hard decision!

Joan, thanks for the memory jogger about Madison Wisconsin! Living there in the 1970s was a trip - in more ways than I can remember. Seriously, there's a lot I don't remember, but I'm pretty sure I loved it. Today, 20:28:50 - Flag - Like - Reply

Susan Blum I want to apologize for my posts being in duplicates. My keyboard must be infected w a smurf. I also apologize for never saying, "Hello to Everyone" when I come to this site. I've never used a chat room so I don't really know the rules. But, I will say good night to all of you now, as my husband is wondering where the heck I am (hiding in my closet w/ computer). Marla Woody Dillsaver why do you keep getting those hives???? can air borne allergies cause hives, rather than something you eat? My husband got hives when he was on some medication that had sulfa in it. Are you on any meds??? Today, 20:15:16 - Flag - Like - Reply

Kathryn R No, I'm not on any meds except I started taking Benadryl at night to relieve the itching. It's got me befuddled, but allergies are so hard to pin down I don't want to spend a ton of my HRA account to find out they don't figure it out and the cause is. I've researched a lot on chronic hives on the internet, and basically it's an allergy to something... and in most cases they can't figure it out and they just relieve the symptoms. Sigh. Rhonda Hargrove I can relate...try oatmeal in your bath...seriously make a "bag" of it in a washcloth and secure with a rubber band. It is extremely soothing to the skin and very gentle. Comments about storms below reminded me of a hailstorm we had on June 1, 1986 when we lived in Southern Maine. We weren't at home, but got thre about 3 hours after the storm and still 2' hail all over. It was fairly localized, but caused a lot of destruction in 2 towns. Every auto that was outside sustained major damage. For those with older cars, they couldn't replace them with the insurance value and drove for months with huge dents on them. It nearly defoliated every tree. The roofing companies were busy for weeks replacing roofs and shingles. Widows were broken in our garage and glass shards went across the garage and embedded in the opposite wall. People outside and in boats on the lake had to take whatever voer they could find. Luckily, no major injuries or accidents.

We are generally very fortunate in Maine (and most of New England) - my worst fears are tomatoes, earthquakes and wildfires. We have very minimal tornado or earthquake activity. Forest fires can happen in a very dry year, but not to the extent CA and other Western states getthem. The last very bad forest fires in Maine were in 1948. There were several different fires and some whole towns were wiped out, including most of Bar Harbor where many of the country's rich and famous had summer property - the Rockafellers, etc.

Not fun at all...no...We get fires out here. Scares the heck out of me. I think fire is the worst until I see/hear all the other natural deasters.

And no, you're not chopped liver. If she does not make her presence known tomorrow night, then OH WELL! Just watch, we'll get storms, and I will be thrown off-line tomorrow night. We're supposed to hit 100 degrees. I won't open them without you people! More fun that way!

There's a place in the Shenandoah Valley of VA (where I went to college) called Kline's Dairy Bar, and they make their own ice cream. They even advertise the special flavors in the newspaper. You can get a refrigerator magnet, too, so you will know and plan! Gotta get there early though if you want to sit outside and eat and enjoy. That place is always packed. My dear friend from college has been know to "cancel" dinner and take her son out for ice cream instead. Nothing wrong with that!

Yep, I'm biased. I get to treat myself every so often. They still bottle milk in the old fashioned glass bottles. Their full milk is awesome and their chocolate milk is to die for. Almost like drinking a milkshake. Of course their eggnog is not to be missed either, almost too thick to pour. Mmmm, high fat dairy!

Not Elliott, but I read the Onion article. You know, when will stop "improving" things? I was listening to the news today and they announced that the iPhone 4 (that's probably not the way you write it) was coming out today. I just pictured all the people running out to get the newest and latest thing. And what will everyone do with the first three versions. And when does the insanity stop? I guess that's capitalism.

I agree, Kristi. I had to bite my lip while listening to almost every salesman to sit in front of me. It was a really frustrating part of my job to listen to each new spiel about how I had to have the new lineup because the old one just wasn't enough any more. The sad part was, they were mostly right, at least as far as sales volume was concerned. If we didn't have the latest and greatest on the shelves, the customers went elsewhere. The consumers blindly buy into the marketing without even realizing it.

This morning I was checking it at the "other" chat when all of a sudden one of the chat-ers was from London, Ontario, Canada and started posting "OMG, there is an earthquake". It's so strange to say this, but I love storms! I always have. I love pouring rain and lightning and thunder. But I love it under specific circumstances - such as when it's off in the distance and I just see and hear it and it isn't threatening me. I live in a Manhattan high-rise, so clearly I am never threatened by uprooted trees, or things such as that.

I kind of like storms too. I was not home the two times tornados came by where I was living. My parents thought I was a bit crazy for being upset that we missed the storms. That is why I hesitated to even intimate that I actually enjoyed storms. But I do - again, from the safety of distance and sure shelter!

Elliott, there's a hotel somewhere in NW Oregon (I think) which is built on a forested area overlooking the Pacific Ocean. Their specialty is storms - the way they've set up the windows for viewing, etc. They have 'storm-watching weekend' packages. People come there from all over the country to experience the storms! What a COOL idea!

I have always loved storm even as a child. I love the sounds and natures lighting shows. I was visiting my brother that lived in a high rise in Chicago and he had windows across his dining room and living room. One morning at 5:00am I woke to the sound of a storm. I cuddled on his sofa and just watch the beauty of the storm. Some of the lighting was lower then I was. It was just beautiful with me being 25 stories high. Everyone else was mad that I didn't wake them. I told them it was my storm. 😊

I think a lot of the deliveries come into the second room that is to the left of the room they are in. The owlets can get into the other room from one "door" opening just about where two of them are standing now - I think there is another opening in the left rear. But I have seen the mother bring food in.

Checking back in after having a client stop by. Now I get to fix dinner. Hubby and daughter had to go out and get their own dinner because daughter needed to be back place tonight before I got out of my meeting. So it's just me now. Good evening, all. Wish I could have joined you earlier, but I had to fill in at work for someone who was sick today, and then went out for dinner. I had so much fun with all of you last night—it was a crazy time, but really great!

At the risk of being a boring mother, my daughter sent me these photos today of her climb up Mt. Jefferson (White Mts. in NH) on Saturday. Her climbing friend, Ben, and she celebrated at the top since it was the last 4000+ ft. peak for him. Then they saw a moose on the way down and were very happy about that. She is getting in shape for a major back-packing trip in the Zirkle Wilderness in CO in July.

Humm...well, the oldest is 63, then 59, and then about 55. Probably much older than you...their dad was a big wig for Exxon. (Sorry!!) They had homes/apartments all over the world...including Manhattan. They're a Greek family. (But the kids were all born here in the US.) My ex-brother-in-law has worked for the UN for a number of years. Brilliant siblings, all of them...but kind of nuts, too! 😊

Beautiful pictures, Natalie. Thanks you. I don't hike, but the White Mountains are one of my favorite places to visit - especially in the Fall when there is a riot of color from one mountain peak to another and beyond. hat was a good hard climb for them - I'm thinking the Jefferson is either the 2nd or 3rd highest there - Mt Washington being the first.

I will reboot it... this is the computer that made me have to go buy a new one. lol.... Gremjins in it for sure! The Vista locks up the msn... I would have to uninstall and reinstall msn to be able to get my email to work for a short time. Then I could see my emails in hotmail... but couldn't send emails... wouldn't let me access Outlook. The mouse pad is a freak! So I go buy the cheapest laptop and it all works fine.... except it won't let me get wireless at home, but will connect to wireless anywhere else... I put all my pictures of Graduation on the new computer... but not I can't crop and fix very easy on this... so copied all pictures to thumb drives and put them on old computer that fixes pictures easy... and now I can't type. Technology wears me out!!! I have to have all the pictures ready tomorrow to hand off.... Oh... to be so smart... to be able to outsmart your own computer!!! lol

It's Bill's method to keep you upgrading your PCs. When XP was the new kid on the block all the videos in the world could be captured. Now they have all been "upgraded" so that you need an upgraded OS to deal with them. Makes the old Cheap Razor / Bloody Expensive Blades marketing look almost honest. 😊

Colleen, it was very funny. The youngest would yell out every 5-10 seconds, "I got pricked!" Errands with Dad just can't be passed up and she left!

We would get up early in the morning, before we were even old enough to be in school, and mom would tie buckets around our waist so we could use both hands for picking. We had Blackberries and Black Raspberries. I never cared to eat the Blackberries, they were too sour, but the Black Raspberries were good! Of course we would eat more than what would end up in our buckets!

Colleen, My mother had those buckets too--coffee cans held around your waist with twine. She usually went and picked by herself as the thickets were wild. Once when I was picking I heard a really high squeaking and found a small bat that had gotten caught in the canes. It flew away very quickly as I moved the canes away from it so I believe it was ok. One of my few encounters with bats (we had one fly into our house once).
Mom would make jam, pies and rumtopf (the germans may know what that is and we would eat it over ice cream--yep, kids could have some!)

Emly, Mmmm, blueberries. One of our favorites! Our local blueberries should be getting ripe in a couple weeks. They are sometimes ready before July 4. I'll have to call the farmer and find out when we can go pick. We usually go out a f2-3 times and pick about 30 lbs and freeze a lot of it. Great place and the farmer doesn't care if the kids eat as they pick.

Yummy, what a treat !! I used to love to go berry picking - blueberries, raspberries, wild strawberries and wild cranberries - but dont do it much any more. The best wild berries are usually down a long, overgrown logging road and I'm hesitant to go by myself any more.

Barb, where do you live ? We've had fireflies for a couple weeks now - very early for us up in the woods of Maine.

Barb
NE Ohio, I saw the first one about a week ago. That is about the time they normally appear. If they arrived early, I didn't notice it.

Barb
I've also started seeing Muckleheads. If we get a strong breeze off Lake Erie my front door will be covered with them. Here's a photo.

The wierdest thing happened - I hit printscreen on my keyboard, and pasted it into my Photoshop Elements. It's the video - moving! It must have copied the link, but that's never happened to me when I take screen shots of videos! I tried to save the image as a .jpg, but no luck. I don't have the expertise to figure out what's going on. Has James been asked about this?

Yes, XP. But this is the only time print screen hasn't worked properly. I wonder if there's stuff embedded in the video that causes this? I really haven't a clue. I'll betcha SnagIt does no better. But please keep us informed about it!

That's one of the weird things that keep happening to me. It's kinda cool in a way. Imagine I take a screengrab, save it, come back two days later, and it's a completely different picture and it's moving! HP Lovecraft would adore it.

Mollie
I just saved it as either a bmp or jpeg but it still turned into a video. SnagIt has a video capture function, but I wasn't using that.

Jan (Bayonne, NJ)
It has to be a link of some sort, then, Mollie, because .jpg or .bmp doesn't support video. When I saved mine as .jpg, all I got was a black rectangle.

The problem, James, is that the video image is not copying - the actual video is copying, as if you were copying a link and pasting it into your graphics program. I just did that and pasted into my photoshop elements, and it's moving!

Dare I think that he plans on having more live feed of future owl families in the future?! grin

Watching the Tel Aviv owls and they are amazingly skinny. They seem healthy and very active, even playful, so I'm sure there's nothing to worry about though.

This one almost looks allen!

Apparently it's all about the camera being used and it's lens/focal perspective. I asked about that last week and someone posted the different camera specs between Carlos' camera and the one being used in Tel-Aviv. And then posted a screen capture of one of the owlets near the camera. The owl looked nice and plump and healthy.

KATE, I'm going to venture out on a limb and say that the Israeli owlets are perfectly normal. You know, a barn owl is really a very small animal. An adult weighs scarcely a pound. Without down or feathers, the owl would look very skinny indeed. These barn owls, although apparently young, do not seem to have a down cover. It may be that the particular species evolved without down because it was not needed in the hot climate. In addition, they haven't yet developed their full coat of adult feathers, so we're seeing a pretty narked little owl. That is my theory du jour.

Does anyone think that makes sense?

A similar discussion came up this morning (about 10:15 EDT) sp this is a repost of my comment:
It's important to know, too, that the Tel Aviv owls are a different species or subspecies of barn owls. From the lit here <http://www.barnowlbox.com/barn-owl-around-the-world.html> they are a species of African barn owls - probably the Erlanger's barn owl. Because of their differing habitat, climate and natural evolution the difference species and subspecies will look different. That being said, they DO look undernourished, scruffy and overheated to us compared to the barn owls we are used to; but they seem to be eating well and handling the heat OK.

Elliott - it makes perfect sense. They do look thinner and whether it's due to less down, less water in their diet, camera lens, etc the owls appear to be healthy. Undernourished or struggling owls don't spend hours playing with a wire in their nest box! I captured the picture and posted it with my comments because I see their health mentioned so often. I think these little guys are fine even tho they look scruffy. Let's call them "wirey", not thin.

Pertaining to the improved owl box, IMO Carlos is keeping his options open. We don't know for sure if Mollie and McGee have been successful mating, and I'm sure Carlos does not want everyone to get their hopes up and then no owlets. I'm sure he needs (and deserves) a break, but seemed to enjoy the owls as much as we did. Just my opinion. . .

If you use a separate window to watch the Starr owls, then just pause the video by clicking on the little square icon under the image before switching back over to this chat. That will stop the streaming and help Pete control the bandwidth.

All good suggestions - and yours below, too, James and Kathryn. Thanks. I'm trying 😊 - but still caught in the dark ages of "Microsoft for Dummies - Version 1.5" - I do have all those links neatly filed in a "Favorites" folder neatly marked "Owl Cam Info". DUH! I just didn't know that I could add those folders to the "Favorites" bar at the top of the page as well. And I knew there were easy links to most things in Wiki and don't think to make maximum use of all your hard work there. I think I'd better stick to things I KNOW I can do - quilting, cleaning, cooking and mowing grass 😊 pursja: I had a dog that got diabetes when he was 8 years old and he lived until he was 17...It takes a lot of constant care and I KNOW with a cat it would be much harder to handle...but it can be done. My vet thinks I hold the record for a dog living with diabetes...I miss all my dogs that are now gone.. 😊. .

Best of luck with your cat.

It really depends on where you are taking those links from when you Put them in that blank email. There are all sorts of hidden things that can pop into a hypertext link which could cause it to fail once posted. That's why I tend to only use the bookmark/favorites feature of my web browser to save and post links from. It doesn't get any simpler than dragging a bookmark from a folder right above the chat window, really.

Tel Aviv Barn Owl Nest Camera
Even some so-called Plain Text email clients will hold onto extraneous hidden info. Web based email clients are really bad about that. Of course to get the actual URL of a site stored in your bookmarks requires an extra click or two, but it's still easier and less trouble prone than alternatives. I use Notepad if I want to keep a list of only URLs for Copy/Paste purposes.

Becky, The vet called last night and said that Rose's blood tests show the medication is actually working a bit too well so we have to take a few days off and cut her dosage back a bit after that. This is good news because it shows there is hope for getting her Cushings disease under control. 😊 Glad the test caught it before her levels got too low though. With all the tests we have run the past year or two this has been one expensive dog!! We are blessed to be able to pay it, and I am blessed that my husband will let me (he's a keeper, as I have said before).

I thought Pete already said he wasn't interested? Didn't he say that he thought there were 'too many distractions' on the SPO pages and that he wants to retain the control to do daily updates? I may have that wrong or missed an update though.

Today, 11:18:42 - Flag - Like - Reply

So I don't get that. He is complaining because its so expensive to run the site, but he won't switch a SPO because he loses some control? Seems like Carlos had plenty of control over what he did and didn't do.

I posted the same just above you, Owlo. I would think he would still have control over his updates. It was the commercials he was concerned about. There was also some discussion a couple of days ago that he wouldn't gain any income from SPO and would still have bandwidth expenses if SPO ran the video.

Hi all,
I'm back. I posted this in the basement for James (and you-all).
If someone is switching back and forth in the same window, what you say is true. The site shuts down and when a person goes back, s/he has to reload the broadcast. What most people do (I think) is have a window for Pete's site and another window for this site. To view the owls, they switch windows. In which case, what we both said is true, the site keeps playing and you cost Pete bandwidth.

JH (Post Pondering) Not to pick nits but, your first reply was not accurate to her question, which is why I gave a more detailed reply.

She asked specifically:

when I back out to here by using the back arrow, does that break with the site? I think it does, but Pete seemed so bummed over expenses that I wanted to make sure...anyone know?

Many people still use only one window/tab. They click links which open in the same window and then navigate back and forth with the Back and Forward buttons. Obviously, if the video is still playing somewhere on the desktop then it is using data and costing money for those who pay for the bandwidth. But, in this case, she was correct to assume that clicking the back arrow and returning here ends the flow of data from Pete's site.

JH (Post Pondering) A big part of your problem is the repetition. The spambot sees you posting the same links over and over and it automatically assumes you are spamming the board with junk. It's best to vary your wording each time and not to post so many links at once especially not in short periods of time. You may be "watched" closely for a while and you may have other posts removed due to that. Just beware. If your posts go unanswered, it's likely because we can not see them, even though you can.

Will try a new post (i.e., not a reply). The translators made an error when the called the steenuil a screech owl. They are not even in the same genus - steenuil is Athene, screech owl is Otus. They would have been closer to the truth if they had translated it as burrowing owl (=another Athene).

JH (Post Pondering) Read my reply to you in my history. The one about using Word documents for storing links. If you copy and paste links here from a word document then you may be asking for trouble. Those links sometimes have redirect info attached which will cause the links to fail when posted here in the chat. Word documents were not designed to be web documents and they can cause much grief when forced to do so.

lynn Pursja, my other reply disappeared. I'm e-mailing Kat and Annie to figure out how to do this. One of us will let you know later.

pursja My stress level just went thru the roof. My cat has been sick off & on for several months. Had her back in excellent health when I left for this job. Today bloody urine & blood sugar in the mid 400s. Stress! Always happens when I am gone & I cannot do anything to help her. Hope my vet is in today...

pursja Well, she is on her way to the vets, the best place for her right now. My Sweetie said she is acting normal & looking fine. I am so glad it is not Friday nite or the weekend!

lynn oh, no. I have cats too (and dogs) and I know how stressful it is when one is sick.
