Ok owl folks. I'm signing off.
 I thought I'd leave you all with some potentially good news, just in case you missed it much earlier today.
 See pic below, then 😊

At the risk of really making someone mad, I'm reposting something I just wrote below in response to Latrippi so I can warn the good posters here:

"Well, Homeschool Famly/Famley has a FB page. Surely you have been here for those posts. And today I called out another FB poster named Naji Wench who laughed it off, but she really does give me strong troll vibes. It doesn't help that her pic is of a star with a circle around. Definitely makes me think she's up to no good! Just beware of Nils/Jim/selde (all the same person) and someone else named Shannon. Possibly GS, but I'm still not sure about that person."

There should be a fuzzy owl toy with glowing eyes, (when you push a button) that waddles and flaps it's wings. Without the mess. Somebody could make a fortune. Of course it would need to have it's own owl box and rodent and pellets.

I'm sure a lot of us did until we could figure out how to post by a chosen name. Now google chrome saves my ID, but what I used before never remembered me, and sometimes after I refreshed, I would post as "guest" because I forgot to type my name again! The trolls I particularly despise have names, and some of them even have FB pages. I don't mind the guests, but when more than one is on, I do wish they had names so we could tell them apart. 😊

I noticed a lot of things in the air. One trick I've used it to note if the UFO disappears behind the box or not. If it does, it's likely a bat. If it doesn't, it's likely a bug right in front of the camera. But I love bats. Have a whole slew of them the come out in the meadow before dark to clean up on the bugs, which do irritate me.

LOL - head-butt you?! That's great! Not that I want to make fun but, ya gotta admit, that sure beats the "they will fly down and get stuck in your hair" tale, and by a mile. 😊 😊

If you have a chance. Go to a life & science museum near you. Many have bats and some even have talks/demos where you can see them up close. Many bats are very soft and delicate to the touch. Much less scary than any bio-lab sample. Seriously.

I wanted to add to the thread below but was afraid it's so far down you wouldn't see it. I want to clarify the platform I mentioned is the big platform aways out from the box. That platform was put there yesterday. The "porch" that is dangling on one end was put up weeks ago. It was designed to be attached only on one side so simulate stepping onto a branch that would sway.

Today, 02:15:42 - Flag - Like - ReplyMerritt

Today I learned there are a lot of trolls who actually visit frequently and have built up quite a chat history. In that chat history, several different names were used to portray different personalities, like the trouble maker, the political ranter, the complimenter, the insulter, the questioner. Somebody has been having a really good time coming on here and toying with all of us. And the funny thing is, one of their favorite things to say is that we need to "get a life." Ironic, isn't it. Also, there are other regular posters whom I mightily suspect of being trolls. Slowly but surely, I am learning to ignore any comments made by them

Today, 02:20:57 - Flag - Like - ReplyMerritt

I posted as a guest the first couple times. I think people who are really interested in wildlife will eventually post through a less anonymous means. trolls, almost by definition, are a bit harder to spot than spammers (posting links to suspicious websites or inciting panic like the children have done) as they are seeking attention or a more subtle kind of solicitation.

I may have my kids write some poetry today for their school work. A couple of them like to watch the owls with me.

We saw our first wild bald eagle yesterday too and the little one (Cindy-Lou) was sing-singing in the car, "We saw a bald eagle, we saw a bald eagle" very cute.

Nature takes its course. I have warned my kids something might happen. I did this when my daughter received her cats. They all turned into butterflies

(thank goodness). They all enclosed. She released all this morning after enjoying them for a couple of days. I was proud of her as she is such an animal/insect lover. I know some are opposed to cats. We have them and often we find captures on our doorstep. However, nature happens.

Everybody works - in nature anyway. There are just different tasks to be done, and different ways of organizing the process. Molly & McGee don't have a discussion about dividing the labor. They just do what instinct directs. Humans have a lot more freedom, but tasks still have to be divided up.

I don't think McGee ever stays around the outside of the box like that... It seems like his deliveries are "hit and run", and sometimes Molly stays outside a while. She listened for McGee the other night, and left just before he came with a food delivery.

Some fun chat snipping from Carlos this morning. He was discussing all the worry warts and the humorous reasons for installing the tarmac/landing pad/launch pad/high rise. One of the things I like most about Carlos is his great sense of humor, even while dealing with the busybodies who nag him all the time.

1:02 carlosroyal: So far it is the tallest owl skyport on record.

1:06 carlosroyal: There will be leaves they are already showing up. That will be the next issue. Can I get rid of the leave for better viewing. It is coming.

1:07 carlosroyal: We are installing an owlpoline so they can bounce back.

1:08 carlosroyal: It has also been suggested that I attach a spring at the far end of the owl patio for better takes offs.

Hi Holly, I'm sorry it's taking me so long to peruse through comments! The tornado(es) struck about 150 miles north of my location. Very sad --10 people lost their lives --many homes and structures were destroyed. Thankfully, we're very blessed as it has been just very windy here! ~praying for those who were impacted~ 😞

Something comes to my mind with all of the thoughts of 'fear'. We all worry which is natural but when i think back on when my children went through their 'fear' as toddlers and people would ask why are they scared? It was a natural instinct for wee ones to fear strangers they all go through that stage, some more than others, but our natural built in instincts/intuition are such great tools and only are honed and grow ONLY if we use them

I was always bothered by some wee ones whose parents insist that they never met a stranger... i think nature has built in safety mechanisms in all creatures.

Just my thoughts here...

I'd think it would be good to teach them HOW to meet strangers. What is appropriate and what is not. In some situations, a stranger could save their lives- if they were lost and needed help.

Yeah, you do not want them to have complete fear for strangers. Most are good, few are bad. Unfortunately, mine have my introverted personality. Which having them brought mine out. I did not want them to be like me. It was hard.

I think you are both right...

I think you teach them not so much strangers, but to trust their instincts/intuition because even familiar faces could be dangerous and many strangers could be helpful, the more you hone and use your instincts/intuition the more developed it gets, we all are born with it, just as these wee owlets were.

You may want to check out a Dutch site, www.beleefdelente.nl They have several different owls. I've been watching Oehoe, an "Eagle Owl" as the Nederlanders call it, in a cliffside nest with 3 chicks. You may need to download a free Macromedia Flash Player. The Kirkoehoe is a Barn Owl. She's sitting on 5 eggs at last count. Thanks to Nootski in The Netherlands, and Bill & Ann for sending me the link to get here.

Has Carlos ever said why he doesn't put the overhead camera on line? He has it playing on the big screen TV in his living room
Yesterday, 23:16:31 – Flag – Like – Reply

Merritt
Yes, he has said it doesn't give a very good view. It has been playing 24/7 on his TV since this broadcast started, though, and he did let us watch it for a while. Really, we couldn't see much of anything so it's just as well he doesn't show it now.

He can only run 3 cameras at one time. The overhead came with the owl box and he connected it to his TV, not knowing all this would happen. LOL He had to have the web cam from one of his computers on the TV to show it here. My guess is that he has the set up where that camera is shooting the new view.

Yes. And I (assume) it may be similar if this was a natural setting. I am assuming as I really know nothing. I heard some do not agree and I hope to not offend anyone. However, if they were in their natural setting, there would be foliage, branches and trees to land on. In a wooded area, you would not drop straight down from 15 feet. 15 feet is the height advised to set an owl box.

Laura, I guess I am one of the naysayers. It's nice they have this perch, certainly. But what about the barn owls who actually nest in barns? No guarantee a tree grows right where they are entering or exiting a nest in that location. Barn owls like to nest in buildings. There's a big drop in those places, too.

I don't know if it was THAT small of a role! I'm not sure it ever would have occurred to me, or it might have like in the late FALL, then I would have slapped myself in the forehead and said "oh, why didn't I think of that!?" Katharine, the owls have taken to perching on anything and everything Carlos has put out in the yard. They like to sit on top of the one camera on that ladder, and they occasionally knock it out of alignment. They are completely comfortable with it all.

No one knows. It will be impossible to tell for quite some time. We had a resident owl expert explain to us a week or so ago that he's seen owls which were thought to be male for quite some time end up laying eggs and sitting on a nest. Down feathers provide no clues. About the only way we could find out any time soon would be to ask the owl. 😊

If you are like we are here in north Missouri, it has done nothing but rain for 2 days so we wouldn't recognize the sun if we saw it 😊

I hate to say it, but watching the owl go to town on the rodent in question reminds me of watching my almost one-year-old daughter eating solids. Messy, messy struggle.

Ingrid, there is a fascinating biological explanation for why they do that. I can't take the time to point you to it right now, but it's related to both seeing and hearing. And yes, I agree. It is incredibly endearing!

Ingrid - I posted one of your little ditties from below on the Molly Wiki. <http://mollyowl.pbworks.com/Haiku>

It is wonderful. Please email it to Eric Blehm also. He may like to use it in his book.

Looks like we need to expand the Haiku page to reflect riddles, ditties, limericks, etc.

With the wiki, we are trying to organize all sorts of information/links/stories/poems about Molly & family, and barn owls in general. All in a easy to locate/navigate location. Both Carlos and Hunting Fishing have been agreeable to the idea. There is also a updated Activity Update (aka the Blue Box Info), kept on the sidebar of the front page. Thanks to Latrippi for setting up the wiki and getting things rolling. 😊

Just a plain owl rhyme

As the sun begins to set,
Owlets still are taking rest,
Time will tell and very soon,
They'll be squawking at the moon.

Molly then will hear their call,
Taking flight she will not fall,
We will watch with joyful glee,
As she sates their hunger plea.
