We have a large herd of wild turkeys that winter near our house. haven't seen them all summer but have now re-appeared in the last 2 days and the group is even larger with a "wildly" sucessful breeding season. They like to stand on the railing and look in the window while I am working on the computer.....hahah. Somehow got a pic of my sweet boy Reuben in there too.....

Taking a break from boxing up my yard sale treasures in the rain. For those wondering.... I'm compromising.... most treasures going on to the donation center, but admitting that a few things are coming back into the house. I'm going to do a smaller yard sale later in October. Then what doesn't sell I'll donate. Another yard sale will give me something to do when the owl babies are gone.... ☹️ we used to have yard sales, but decided it's too much work, so now we just donate. Most goes to a greyhound rescue, they have a big sale every year. My husband says we could put all that time and work into a sale and make a little money, or he could work a few hours overtime! so that's how we look at it now.

although once you have the stuff set out, I think it's kind of fun, and a good way to meet more people in the neighborhood. But I also think it's fun to donate to different organizations, esp. the ones that help animals.

I used to have joint yard sales with my girls. It always turned out that when the day came to sit and sell, I was the only one around, and it was usually 100deg out. We have a dynamite consignment store. Over the years have made a few bucks and have gotten rid of lottso stuff. I was toying with the idea of a yard sale but rethought it and not.

I'm going to do the last small one to support my son's high school. Other than that, I'm done, no more saving up for the next yard sale. Everything is going straight to donation centers. We do have a consignment store not far away, I may start taking a few things there. But I like to donate too. From now on, everything is going out of here the minute I make the decision that I don't want it anymore, whatever it is!

How nice of you to say that. I have almost always felt included. Once or twice I got pushed a little hard...but I walked away, realized sometimes what is written is not what is intended. Realized that sometimes I was wrong, or not exact enough to the standards here. And realized sometimes I was just having a bad day and needed to limit my "contribution" because of it. But all in all, I really think if you feel left out, then you left yourself out. When I lurked for days and added nothing, I was researching and studying so I could add something. It's deepened my experience here so much. That, and all of you guys!

Good morning MODS. I'm down in SC and it is still summer here, DH wanted to know why we left PA and it's beautiful fall weather to come back to summer. We really didn't have a choice as we are down here to pick the color for the cement siding that was just put up on the house; the contractor said that if we hadn't done this job we probably would have lost the wall facing the ocean if we were hit with a big storm. We are down to three greens, samples up on the side of house, and all of them are okay. Let's hope the Architectural Review Board agrees. Will go basement diving and see what happened in the past few hours. Have a great day. Barb

Good morning, orionsstorm. Good luck with your home protection. May the good Lord watch over all along the coast.

I'm in Mobile, AL and know what it's like to run from (or hunker down for) a hurricane. Hopefully, they are over for this season.

Nov 30 is the day we can breathe a sigh of relief. My brother and sister had lots of water for Katrina in their homes.

The stress of Katrina is still with us.

GloWhit5, thanks for the good wishes. I can't imagine how difficult it is always be fearful of the weather woes in the Gulf region. We have been very fortunate here in SC, most of the hurricanes that have hit the East coast have missed us. In the 15 years we have had the house, we have been evacuated twice during our time here. Both times although the storms were predicted to hit between Savannah and Charleston, (Google map would show you that it was our house that the arrows pointed to) overnight they would always make a turn and hit NC around the Outer Banks. We always pray that no lives would be lost, and that God would leave the beaches and homes intact. I think all of us breathe a sigh of relief when November 30th comes around every year.

Ashley is a little bit bigger than Carrie. We don't know yet that they are girls. In the last clutch, we called them all "he" and it turned out 2 (probably 3) were female. Eventually we'll see if they have the colorful chest of the females or the white chest of the males.

Joan, a word to the Wise...a couple of years ago, we had our furnace checked and the technician found that we had a major carbon monoxide leak thru out the house, bad enough that we were almost evacuated. Could have been bad if we hadn't found it and fixed it right away (had to install a whole new furnace) So when you get yours checked make doubly certain that they use a carbon monoxide detector on your vents.

This literally makes me want to throw up. Thanks you for posting it to remind us that "in the wild" is where they need to be. I read about one owl who was taken from it's nest, not fed the right food, and not only did not have any instictual behaviours, but also had glass-bone syndrome, so it's wings were permanently outstretched and so brittle that a simple bump would result in broken bones. Those people all need to be throw in jail!

Beautiful sunny day here in Sarasota. 😄 Hope it is the same for all you wonderful MODs out there. I will try to peep in from time to time. The babies are growing so fast. Can't wait to see one of them make their debut. Thank you for all the stats ... always good to see they have been well fed. Have a great day...and remember, Life is Good! 😊 😊 😊

Since I did not learn how to take a picture until late in the game, if anyone has any early photos of these 2, I sure would love to have them. 😊 Can you post them on here so I can copy them...PLEASE 😊 ?

I have some from Carlos' blog...but to tell you the truth, what I most enjoy are our "amateur" photos taken of shots that mean something to all of US!

Here are two that I took. I'm sorry I don't have the date of the pic with Ashley and Carrie, but I think it was toward the end of August.

Roni, if you have FB, I can post many for you on there, and you can copy them. I wouldn't mind, I have so many pics from day one. But I won't be able to do it until later this afternoon by about 3 -4 pm. Will be going out.

Only problem with that is, I don't think the RV garage would count as "abandoned"! 😊
