As far as determining the sex. I found this statement at the link below. "Although female barn owls tend to have darker plumage and males tend to be whiter, this is only a generality and not a surefire way of determining sex."

Yes! Deleting your post will also delete any other comments which were added as a reply to your specific comment. All the comments will remain however in the respective chat histories of the users. Whether we see them or not.

That is one reason I tend not to answer certain people here. They have a tendency to selectively delete their own posts after any kind of high level exchange, which then leaves others in a position to be misinterpreted. I feel it is not always innocent either.

I have one of these signed prints, still in the original packing tube, I really should pay someone to frame it properly for me.

Lori, I read there was a barn owl box in Texas that had 27 eggs...all hatched and all fledged...Can you even imagine that??? those parents must have been super heroes...
Today, 13:53:59 - Flag - Like - Reply

James Hill (in Itforthe Shilling)
I'd like to see some supporting documentation on that! 😊

Are you sure it wasn't a Barn in Texas, where 27 barn owl owlets were raised, by more than one nesting pair? Barn owls are known to be gregarious and there will often be more than one "family" in a single barn.

Didn't that other video say that 8 eggs was the record? I think 27 is a bit much for one pair.

The Live Stream has spam on it or something...and the other chat is super fast. I guess "to each, his own"...I think Carlos does the other chat...not this one though...he should visit all three...I guess when you have thousands viewing at one time, you need several chat rooms.

Unfortunately I missed it when they fledged the nest...of course on my days off... but they dropped to the ground and hid in the bushes close to their "tree".. They hopped and flapped many a day until they could fly away.

Thanks so much for posting that. My husband had to leave the room, my 5 year old is laughing hysterically and asking for us to "play it again, play it again". It looked as though maybe Pattison was asking Max "hey are you gonna eat that?"

Thank you Carolyn. You should try one too! They can be a lot of fun. Do you know the rules? A haiku is a poem consisting of 3 lines with a total of 17 syllables. 5 syllables in the first line, 7 syllables in the second, and 5 in the third. The haiku is supposed to be about nature and is not supposed to rhyme, but you can break two those rules if you want to. 😊

It's very easy. If you haven't tried, all you need to do is remember 5-7-5. 5 syllables 1st line, 7 the second, 5 the third. I think Merritt started this one slow right when the camera was down.

Does any one know if Carlos has taken more responsibility and put fledging poles at the mouth of the box?? owlets can not fly!! they must exercise/flap their wings to develop strength before flight or they will fall to the ground like lead balloons.... and thats a deadly fall

Kelly, owls have been learning to fly since time out of mind. Carlos is doing everything imaginable to give these owlets a safe and extraordinary entry into the world, while not interfering with them. They are, will be continue to be, just fine and nature will take it's proper course. Meanwhile, we get the amazing gift of watching it happen!

Yes, Bill, I'm familiar with almost all the different demo teams. Grew up near Myrtle Beach AFB and had the opportunity to watch the Thunderbirds, Blue Angels, and many more, either directly at the show or from a distance. Our home was situated in the regular flight patterns of the A10 Warthogs, always something in the air in those days.

Flight of any kind fascinates my husband, he lived across from an airport when he was growing up, the airport also housed our NE Florida Air National Guard. He learned how to fly early on, brought his first plane, his buddy is former AG pilot and retired airline pilot. We can see the NASA shuttle night bunches from our backyard, we are going to miss them.

Jenny, I wonder if you have a clue how much time, effort and expense went into this. Those cameras that give us the wonderful views aren't free. He started this for friends and family, and it turned into something far beyond what anyone expected. Instead of complaining, why can't you just enjoy the fact that we all get to see this--for free. You don't have to buy anything if you don't want, and Carbs certainly isn't getting rich off this. What he is getting is a lot of sleepless nights and days devoted to making sure we get the best show. He is getting to give up his planned vacation and other things that he and Donna wanted to do. And of course, he is getting the complainers like you, who are apparently never satisfied with anything and always find something to complain about. Here's an idea, if you think you can do it better, do it.

What amazed is all the time, not to mention the cost of equipment which does not include his equipment in cameras, computer, etc., before this whole thing escalated. He pops in late at night, early am, very early am, noon, evening, late evening, he is around almost 24/7 of an on, watching, taking pictures, updating us, thanking all the wonderful moderators, talking to the news media (to me that would be painful lol), classrooms, groups, he find willing people, a world renowned author, illustrator, and cartoonist to take this project on, to raise money for San Marcos Community Foundation to preserve and enhance wildlife habitat...

Amazing, they have both personally committed to this with their generosity and kindness and literally have brought us all, strangers from around the world, into their lives, their dining/living area, in their home, their backyard with such a giving spirit, learning and teaching us all the way with each other.

I hope their lives will always be as enriched as enriched others. Personally, my husband and I are awed with their great generosity in doing so with such lives. This is just priceless... Just my thoughts...

Personally, I think he deserves whatever he can make and then some. It's the american dream. I wouldn't mind stumbling onto some money making adventure that would let me buy that farm I want. But to be honest I don't think he has made a mint but I think he deserves to for all the time he has put into it. I look forward to his updates and love the entertainment he gives us. I just watched my cat bobbing her head before racing across the room to pounce on a toy, and I'm realizing I'm seeing the same behavior in the owlets. I'll bet Molly and McGee do the same kind of movement before they fly from a branch onto something moving. I think what they are doing is getting an exact distance measurement!

Any ideas whether I might be right?

They ARE getting an exact distance measurement. Owls have asymmetric ears (one higher than the other), and they hunt in the dark by sound alone. They get a "k" by triangulating -- measuring the difference in the distance of the prey to each ear.

It really is the owlets! They have gotten huge, haven't they. We keep waiting for Max to make the first move. Fledging begins between day 50 and 60 in a barn owl's life, and Max is 55 today. Fledging is a month long process for barn owls. They will first step out and hop around, a stage that is called "branching," and then they will take short choppy flights progressing to longer and more graceful flights over time. Mid-June they will leave the nest to find homes of their own. M&M will continue to provide for them until they leave for good.

Hi everyone! I finally got some laundry done - not nearly enough, though. Just enough to let me think I got something accomplished!

You're TOO much, Jan 😊!! I'm limiting myself to 15 min. maximum visits here through the day. I have to get enough of her things done in the house and yard to I can have a sense of accomplishment when I sit down and stare at my monitor thru the evening and half the night.

Just said final goodbyes to my friend who lost her 14 struggle against cancer...found out my father's best friend died this morning. So nice to see the owls and owl of you and know that something in the world are OK, at least for a while. Here's to a successful fledging, whenever nature decides the time is right!! Back later!!

In case you didn't hear, Carlos has reminded people that he does hold copyright to the photos so you can keep copies for yourself but not to sell, etc.

Good morning human and owl friends!
Rainy here. Again. At least it isn't storming.
Couldn't go back very far this am. Will all the human food that is mentioned, baked beans, lemon brownies, etc be in the cookbook?

This was all of our PUNCH CONVERSATION from staying up most of the night. I invited everyone for a grill out at noon at my house. Didn't hear of any takers so my husband and I ate by ourselves. Of course Angel the dog was bok for a treat.
