March 12 update on NX - Some Good News

NX was caught up and brought into the Wildlife Center this morning for another series of radiographs, and the Center's vets were pleased with what they saw. The avulsion fracture in NX's left shoulder continues to heal gradually and although there are still some bony changes visible at the end of her humerus, the Center's vets still attribute these to the healing fracture. Her left shoulder is still dropped noticeably, but NX demonstrated a good range of motion in the joint and the Center's vets agreed that there is a good possibility that NX will begin regular exercise later this month.

Rich Chris Brunner The digital radiograph machine got a work out today (Monday) at the WCV ... Bald Eagle NX, Critter Cam Red-shouldered Hawk, and Virginia Beach Peregrine Falcon 12-0023 all received radiographs -- and all with some good news! Trystan Williams I'm still here just about. I think it is still possible she could pair and breed again this year, if there is enough food available. They have to make the most of what time they have. The gamble for her would be to wait for next year or to try again later this year.

Kitty Carlyle What will happen with the box, though? Its McGee's box, right? Not Molly's?

Kitty Carlyle Molly would leave and go to the new male's box or nest, isn't that correct?

Monday at 6:33pm · Like

Trystan Williams Often in raptors it is the female that picks the nest site, even though the male draws her to one he selected. Females always pick the home though right? Males have to be mindreaders and figure which she will choose :P

Now then, remember your art history from college? Or think back to your grade school field trip to the Met (LACMA, Art Institute, Guggenheim, the High, the Getty, National Gallery, whatever), or to the relevant episode of Jeopardy.

Do you recognize this famous painting? The guy who painted it was Dutch, and the title of the painting is in Dutch. And I actually can't find it. We need you to improvi...
